THE WRITER'S APOLOGY.

Comrades—who like in this hard world
Some sport with toil to mingle—
To easy make the soldier's fate,
I think you'll like my jingle.
Camp life is dull and irksome, too,
E'en for men stout and ruddy;
But is aught worse to intersperse
With toil than too much study?
'Tis not for gains I've taken pains
To make this little volume,
Telling in rhymes—motions and times,
For manual and column.
Myself to please—to get release
From poring over tactics,
I fell to work and made this book
A rhymèd book—didactic.
Perhaps the mem'ry 'twill assist
The real rules to learn;
And then, perhaps—your camps amidst—
You'll think I've not done harm,
In treating in a blithesome way
What all of us must know;
Laugh with or at me as you may—
Content am I—that's true.

So, all ye valiant men-at-arms,
Who fight to quell rebellion;
Who fear no foe, or war's alarms,
We'll form our first battalion.
T I T L E  I.

A R T I C L E  F I R S T.

Formation of regiment in line of battle.

O R D E R  O F  C O M P A N I E S.

*1. First, sixth, fourth, and ninth—to which add the third,
Will comprise the right wing, as I've always heard;
Eighth, fifth, tenth, and seventh—of course with the second,
Complete your parade, if rightly I've reckoned.
To simplify this—make it easy to learn—
For such of my friends as may feel some concern:
Lest they cannot remember, you'll readily see
That the right wing makes—16—498—
Whilst the left—I distinctly assure you 'tis true—
Is, 8—51—0—72.
Thus proving at once, beyond cavil or doubt,
That the left leads the right in numbers, about,
We'll say, eight hundred and thirty-four thousand five hundred and seventy-nine—a mere trifle, if in dollars, over and above a corp'ral's pay.

* The numbers placed in the margin correspond with the numbers of paragraphs in the last edition Regulation Tactics.
2. Is your regiment lacking full quota of men? The rule still applies, as with companies ten: For the first takes the right—known as the right flank—And the second the left—since that's next in rank; The third the right centre—so on, if you please, Your battalion is formed with comfort and ease.

3. Now, whilst you manœuvre, your stations are known By your place in the line, not your rank, as I've shown; Since while first's still the first, you readily see The second is tenth, by what once was Hardee.

4. Commence at the right to mark off divisions, Two companies each, making no omissions. Should your companies chance in numbers be odd, The one that is left must work in this mode: To act as it can, squeeze in where it may, But trust to the adjutant—he'll see fair play.

5. By platoons and sections are companies formed, (Have patience to learn now, and don't be alarmed,) First—second—third—fourth—to the left—from the right Make the sections. Platoons, in infantry light, Number two—first and second—this is so plain No reason there seems, I should further explain.

7. In line of the battle, your colors will be On the left of the right-centre company.

8. In two ranks, your staunch men you'll always array, Long ones on the right—then grow short gradually.
9. The four, front and rear, that together you stand,
   Are comrades in battle—you will understand;
10. Now, to know just how far front-rank is from rear,
   Breast to back, is just thirteen inch in the clear.

   This known, you will station your officers brave,
   According to rules that next page you shall have.

POSTS OF COMPANY OFFICERS, SERGEANTS, AND CORPORALS.

13. On right of your company, captain will stand,
   (First corporal touching with elbow, not hand;)
14. The first sergeant will stand direct in his rear,
   (Called "covering sergeant," as'll shortly appear;)
19. The balance of sergeants, you know you've four more,
20. Make a sequence from left, as thus: 2—3—4;
21. And the fifth—your learning to facilitate,
22. I've taken the trouble to draw you this plate.

16. First lieutenant in rear, fourth section you'll find,
17. Second ditto, will stand first platoon behind;
24. The corporals take their place by direction—
   At left, and the right of front of each section.

25. When any from drills or parade are away,
   The next one in rank, takes his place for the day.

POSTS OF FIELD OFFICERS, &C.

27. In rear of the file-closers, colonels will be,
   One score and ten paces the whole line to see;
28. The next in command, will but twelve paces go,
   The major is posted twelve paces, also,
80. The adjutant eight, sergeant-major as near.
   To station the rest, I have not got room here;
   The whole by your colonel will gladly be shown,
   When he thinks it worth while each place should be known.

COMMANDS.

Three kinds of command there are, I shall men-
62. The caution is first—the word is Attention;
63. The next, to inform you how to move, and where,
   Intended to warn you for motion prepare;
64. And the last, which is brief, such as “March,”
   or, say “Halt,”
   If spoke quick and firm, cannot catch you in fault.

And now, if you think as a teacher I’ll suit,
At once we’ll begin on the School of Recruit.

School of the Soldier.

In this part of work, (getting perfect in drill.)
70. Each man must be carefully practised, until
   In facings he moves like a living machine,
   Complete in his movements—no error’ll be seen;
   Then, but not until then, I pick out four men,
   And together we’ll work at facings again.
72. Have patience, great patience, I’ll oft think it best
   That you should receive the commanding word,
   Rest,
   Which liberty gives you for looking around,
   For moving the feet, laying down on the ground—
RHYMED TACTICS.

Or any thing resting; in short, you're quite free—
Not leaving the spot without leave from me.

73. When "In place—Rest" I say, and naught farther add,
It is to relieve your position, my lad;
One foot in its track you must then always keep,
With the rest of your body, kick, dance, or sleep,
Till,
"Attention," the "Squad," you'll hear me command;
Then, soldiers' position's resumed by the band,
(Or squad, as you please.) This pose I'll detail,
Since a bad setting up 'll make everything fail.

POSITION OF THE SOLDIER.

78. The heels on one line, and together as near
As the size of your legs, or bowlegs will bear;
The toes, turning out, while erect on the hip,
Leaning forward a little—neither side tip—
The body's adjusted. The shoulders keep square,
Position as easy as home, or elsewhere;
Arms hanging naturally down by the side,
Elbows near body, not as though they were tied;
The palms of the hands toward the front turned a grain,
Fourth finger on pant-seam. The head must remain
Erect, but not stiff; the eyes fixed on the ground,
Fifteen paces ahead. All this will be found
Essential to learn. It's truly amazing,
If perfect in this, how easy are facings.
"Eyes—Right,"

81. I command, and the soldier, his head
Will turn in the way I have intimated;
The left eye, with buttons of coat bring in range,
'Tis easily done, and 'twill be very strange,
If, when

82. "Front"
    I command, at once he don't come
    As he was before hearing command number one.

83. "Eyes—Left,"
    By direct inverse means, he'll perform,
    Then, in practising

86. "Rest,"
    He cannot go wrong.

87. "Attention" the "Squad."
    We'll now try and excel

88. In practice of facings. The way, I will tell:
    Position of soldier, at once you’ve assumed,
    I then
    "Squad, Right—Face"
    will command, 'tis presumed;

89. At which you will see, that you raise your right foot
    Just slightly; then turn on the left heel; then put
    The right foot in its place, the heels on a line,
    The right face you have in precisely one time.

90. "About—Face"
    Requires your closest attention;
    It cannot be learned without application.
    In two times, or pauses, this movement you’ll make

91. As follows: at "About," the right foot you’ll take;
    Place the hollow three inches behind the left heel,
    (The left foot you’ve turned front, for fear you might reel
    In making this movement.) At word of command

92. Number two, which is Face, on both heels you stand,
And so turn wholly round; your right foot adjust,
And except that you've turned, you stand as at first.

STEPS.

I do not guess it can be necessary, I should tell
One how to walk, who'll breathe and talk,
And both things do quite well;

94. But length of step, and time of step,
    I'll have to make you know;
So, now, I'll start and make a step,
    These several things to show.
In common time, (to make the rhyme,
    This last clause I have writ,)
The length is eight and twenty inch—
    Ninety to a minute.

102. In time called quick—know, Tom or Dick,
    The length is just the same;
One hundred ten, I tell you men,
    In sixty seconds' time.

104. In double-quick, you'll cut your stick
    Three-thirty inches long
One sixty-five—you'll move alive—
    In minutes' time ain't wrong.

97. In marching, always you will go—
    The left foot starting first—
The knee turned out, depressed the toe,
    And coat-tails coming last.

114. There may be times, when double-quick
    One eighty is a minute,
But, guided by your band's music,
    There'll be no trouble in it.
When to the run, you have to come,
    For fear of coming evil,
Along you sail, arms at a trail,
    And put in like the——mischief.
108. "Squad—Halt!"

The foot that's coming down,
You'll keep just where it strikes;
Then place the other where it was Before your start; that's right.

Manual of Arms.

Now to the manual we will go,
And study that a trifle;
The manual that I shall show,
Is only for the rifle.

127. Four of best men, since that's enough
To practise with just now,
I'll take, and form them in one rank,
Each move to make them know.
Each man, be sure, stand well and straight,
As I've before instructed;
I place the rifles in your hands,
Your grasp is thus conducted:

121. Guard to the front, (arms hanging down,)
Embraced by thumb and finger,
As shoulder arms, this movement's known,
But longer here we'll linger.
On little finger rests the lock;
Three fingers altogether,
Will firmly grasp the rifle's stock,
Not clutch—but grasp it—neither
Too low, nor must it be too high,
But gracefully and steady
You'll hold your piece, and bye-and-bye,
To go on you'll be ready.

The rifle's held in the right hand,
I should have said before;
The times and motions, understand
I'll tell—beside much more:

128. All movements of the manual
In one time are perfected;
The motions differ with the thing commanded, or directed.

129. The rate at which motions you'll make, is nineteen to a minute; at first great pains you'll have to take, this time to move within it; till this you stand at shoulder arms.

133. "Support—Arms."

I command, now

One time, three motions, this demands; the piece with the right hand, now you'll bring in front between the eyes, the barrel to the rear bring;

Then, with left hand, at lower band, you'll seize the piece, a clear thing. at once the right hand slides below, four inches 'neath the cock quite, and motion first, you now will know, piece held by band and stock tight.

134. Now turn the piece with the right hand, bring the barrel to the front; to the left shoulder carry it;

Move steadily, since you won't get on any faster by hurrying and slurring over the very movements you are striving to perfect yourself in.

The fore-arm pass beneath the cock, the rifle resting now there,

Your left hand resting on your breast, the right hand on the stock, where it was when last you made the change.

And now, I have a notion—

If you this posture don't derange, you're learnt the second motion.

135. Motion the third is very plain, and readily is taught;

The right hand to its side again, and thus you have Support.
136. Command now,
    "Rest,"
    At which you'll bring
137. Your right hand to the piece;
    And after, you can laugh or sing—
    In short, you stand at ease.
138. "Attention—Squad—"
139. The right hand drop,
    As I've before repeated;
    When all the motions of Support
    We'd carefully completed.
    Again, I order
140. "Shoulder—Arms."
    One time and motions three,
    Against, and under the left arm,
    The right will placed be.
    Seize with left hand the lower band,
    Your thumb at length extended;
    Slightly from shoulder move the piece,
    Left arm, it is intended
    Should lay along the stock with ease;
    Here motion first is ended.
141. To the right shoulder, with both hands
    The rifle now is mov'd;
    The rammer to the front, my man,
    Take pains and you'll improve.
    With your fore-finger and your thumb,
    The guard you'll now embrace;
    Your left hand to right shoulder'll come,
    Your left arm cross your breast.
    Your fingers straight (not separate),
    Your right arm almost so;
    And now, it gives me pride to state,
    We've finished motion two.
142. At motion three, you'll drop left hand
    Down quickly by its side;
    And thus, at Shoulder Arms you stand,
    If Hardee has not lied.
LIEUT. KLINE, 31st N. Y. S. V.

p. 14
"Gov."
CAPT. DAVID LAMB, 81st N. Y. S. V.
143. "Present Arms"

claims attention next:

One time, and motions two.
The piece before your body bring
Erect. There, that will do.
With the right hand this thing is done,
The left, the rifle takes Betwixt guide sight and lower band
Midway; make no mistakes.
The thumb is stretched against the stock,
Fore-arm against your waist;
Toward yourself you have the lock,
Rammer, toward whom you're faced.
So much for motion first. Now then,

144. Grasp stock with dexter hand,
Against the guard, below it—when
At—Present Arms—you stand.

Now

145. "Shoulder Arms,"

(we're getting on.)

This time with motions two.
To shoulder right the rifle bring,
Embrace the guard, you know,
With thumb and finger, as before.
Now, slip up the left hand
High as right shoulder, but no more;
Hand straight, you understand.

146. That hand now drop, for motion two
By left side quickly down;
Stand straight and easy, that will do,
And "Shoulder Arms" is shown.

The

147. "Order Arms"

the next command,

One time, and motions two
With the left hand, near upper band
The piece you seize. Now you
Slightly detach, with your right hand,
   The rifle from yourself;
Then loose the grasp of that right hand,
   And lower with your left.
Re-seize the piece above the band,
   With your right hand, and now
Four inches from the ground you'll find
   Your butt, you'll soon see how.
Supported by your hip, your hand
   By lower band, supports the piece;
Left hand drops down, you understand,
   Along its side as 'twas at first.

148. For motion two, your rifle slip
   Down gently through your hand;
Look out you do not strike your feet—
   Thus countless toes are jammed.

149. The piece you will with care adjust,
   The beak against your toe;
The muzzle, from your arm, you must Hold inches—well—say two.
Your hands you hold convenient low,
   The right the barrel grasp
'Twixt the fore-finger and the thumb,
   With ease, you hold it fast.
Whilst fingers three, together joined,
   Extend along the piece behind,
And upright keep it. Now, 'tis best
Since you're fatigued, that I say
   "Rest."

151.

152. "Attention Squad."
   Again we'll try
Our hand at

153. "Shoulder Arms."

154. The piece you'll raise, about as high
   As the right breast. (No harm
From frequent "shoulders" will accrue,
   And to a shoulder ever
RHMYED TACTICS.

The piece must come, ere we can do
   The points we now go over.)
With the right hand, you raise the piece
   As I above have said;
The left, then place below the right,
   The right then grasps the guard.

The left arm now is 'cross the breast,
   And thus is ended motion first.

155. The left now to its side drop down,
   And shoulder arms again is done.
   One time, two motions, as before,
   I'm very glad they're through, I'm sure.
In nine times, diverse motions,
   The first loadings I ask;
So the enumeration
   Better be our first task.

156. "Load"—is the first we shall explain;

157. To "Handle Cartridge"—is quite plain,

158. To "Tear" the "Cartridge"—naught I see,

159. Than "Charging" "Cartridge"—plainer be.

160. To "Draw" the "Rammer"—boys can do,

163. To "Ram" the "Cartridge"—even you,

164. "Return" ing "Rammer"—is no bother,

167. "Prime"—is the last except one other,

169. To "Shoulder Arms"—we've thrice essayed,

Now—Explanations shall be made.
156. First,
    "Load,"
    (which is no load at all,
      But only to get ready.)
    One time, and motion one is all.
    Now try and do it steady.
156. The piece with your left hand you'll grasp,
    As high as elbow right;
    Then bring it your body across,
      And moving in plain sight
    Shift your right hand to upper band,
      Put butt between your feet;
    The barrel from you, as you stand,
      The movement's near complete.
    The barrel near the muzzle seize,
      Hold slightly from the body;
    To cartridge-box the right hand, please,
      And now you are quite ready.

157. For second time, which I will state, Directs to "Handle Cartridge."
    Two fingers and a thumb you'll take,
      To do this to advantage.
    Between your teeth the cartridge thrust,
      And now for number three.
158. "Tear Cartridge."
    Since you must, you must,
    For torn the thing must be.
      (That's why doctors—"sick-boy finders,"
    When you joined, did quiz your grinders.)
    When torn, you hold the thing upright,
      That powder you don't spill;
    Front of the muzzle hold it tight,
      At time the fourth, you will

159. "Charge Cartridge." Time and motions one,
    The powder you will tip
Into the barrel; mind, my son,
    You do not lose a bit.
The ball from paper disengage,
    With both hands this you'll do,
Then send it on its pilgrimage,
    (The big end first, you know.)
Within the barrel, press it down,
    With thumb of your right hand;
Then with the right the rammer seize,
    Ready for fifth, now stand.

"Draw Rammer;" (this, with motions three.)
    Half draw the rammer now;
Then hold it fast as fast can be,
    With the left thumb, and so
You have a chance to slip your right
    On rammer, muzzle near;
Keeping your finger-nails in sight
    Of me, not you, that's clear.
For motion second you will take
    The rammer from the pipes;
By elevating your right hand,
    The rammer in your gripes.
For motion third the rammer 'll fall,
    Small end left shoulder near;
The head of rammer place on ball,
    Front of your hand, in rear.

163. And now
    "Ram CARTRIDGE" is the word;
The time and motion one;
Until the sixth, the move's deferred,
    Two more and I am done;
For as your right hand lets it go,
    The rammer you will shove,
With your left hand you'll hold it there,
    And move the right, above.
Up to the small end, you will move
    This hand, and grasping there
The rammer with finger and thumb,
   Will press the ball just where
You want it. Then at once you’re right,
   The seventh time to go to,
(Keeping the back of hand in sight,
   The elbows body near to,
Will draw the rammer half way out.

164. “Return Rammer.”

This time,
With the left thumb you’ll keep it out.
   Two motions more, then Prime.
(Since time the seventh of Rifle load,
   One time, three motions is,)
Your right now slide from there above,
   To where the end your gun is,
Your little finger uppermost,
   And keep in front your nails.
The thumb along the rammer stretched,
   (In this move no man fails.)
You’ll clear the rammer from the bore,
   Your arm by stretching out,
For motion first, there’s nothing more.
   Now rammer turn about.
For second motion—small end place
   At mouth of pipe—then force
The rammer down that little space,
   Half way,—and then, of course,
Your right hand ’s placed, the nails turned out,
   And very near the muzzle.
Your little finger, (without doubt,
   For rhymes I’m in a puzzle,)
Will now the rammer press down home,
   The rammer pipes within;
The left will down the barrel come,
   The right where last it’s been,
(Thank Heaven, that seventh time’s achieved,
I’ve forced the rhyme, and am relieved.)
With motions two, and in one time,
The next time you will do,
The word commanded now is

167. "Prime."

With speed we'll put it through.
With the left hand you'll raise the piece,
That hand high as your sight;
With the right hand, you'll grasp the stock,
And half face to the right;
The right foot place behind the left,
The hollow 'gainst left heel,
Then slip left hand adown your piece,
Till lower band you feel.
The thumb along the stock you'll place,
Left elbow 'gainst your body,
And thus you stand at half right face,
To prime you're nearly ready.
The piece you bring to your right side,
Right fore-arm over butt,
The muzzle level with your eye,
The cock on nipple shut.
Half-cock with thumb of hand the right,
The fingers 'gainst the guard,
Remove the old cap from your sight,
Its beauty being marred.
With thumb and finger in your pouch,
Feel till you catch a cap,
Then on the nipple careful couch,
What you have caught, and tap
It firmly down upon its place,
By pressing with right thumb.
The stock, then seize with your right hand,
And motion two is done.

169. Now, "Shoulder Arms."

This from a prime,

(The loading part is 'er,)
With motions two—but in one time,
As you have done before.
The piece to the right shoulder bring,
    With left hand hold in place:
Face to the front, then gently swing
    The right heel into place.
With the right hand, you'll grasp the piece,
    As oft before I've shown;
At second motion drop left hand,
    And nine times load—is done.
In every movement, you must strive
    Each part to perfect do;
Thus at perfection you'll arrive,
    And only thus. Should you
Slur over, in your haste to move
    One single part, you'll rue,
Since time, this fact you'll find, will prove,
    Patience alone will do.
The order next you have to learn
    Is
171. "Ready."
    Motions three;
With the right hand, you'll raise your piece,
    That handy it may be,
You'll make a half pace to the right;
    On the left heel turning,
The right foot carry to the rear,
    You'll feel that you are learning.
The hollow of the same right foot
    A proper angle making,
Against the left foot heel, you'll put,
    Whilst up the piece you're taking.
The piece now at the lower hand,
    With you're left hand you'll grasp;
From off your shoulder move it slight,
    And thus you hold it fast.
For motion two, then you will bring
    With hands, your rifle down,
The barrel slightly upward points;
    Along the stock, your thumb
(The thumb of your left hand, I mean)
Extended is; and now
The butt is 'neath your right fore-arm,
Don't get it there too low;
The stock against your body is,
Two inches 'neath the breast,
The muzzle high as your right eye,
Against the side, your rest
Left elbow, now, with your right thumb,
The cock, you'll gently press,
Your fingers 'neath the guard will come,
And two is done, unless
My meaning, you've misunderstood,
But this is what you never should.
For motion third, full cock the piece;
Then seize at small of stock
The rifle, but in doing this,
Be sure, don't move the butt.
My next command, to "Aim" will be,
One time, one motion still;
You raise your piece, that you may see,
What you intend to kill.
Support the butt 'gainst shoulder right,
Incline the head upon it,
Your right eye fix upon the sight,
Your left, the lid upon it.
Your right thumb stretched upon the stock,
On trigger the fore-finger,
With shoulder, slightly press the butt,
Or in your tracks, you'll linger
But a very short time after you fire, particularly if you have a very heavy charge in, since some of the arms of the present warlike period, do kick like _mischief._
If in two ranks your firing's done,
For that I will provide;
The rear rank man will take a step
177. Now, "Fire,"
Try to make a mess
Of some deluded foe,
Your finger 'gainst the trigger press,
And bang, your gun will go.
Don't move a hair,—stand at the aim,
That posture does not cease
179. Till word is given,
"Load,"
And then
With both hands bring the piece,
Butt 'twixt your feet, as back we've seen,
When loadings first, we did begin.
182. Or,
"Shoulder Arms,"
may be command;
Then briskly raise, with your left hand,
Your right up and straight assume
The "Shoulder Arms" before as shown.
(At both orders "Load," and "Shoulder," Face to front, with no more order.)
At times, perhaps, the Order'll be 184. "Recover Arms."
You then
Position take of motion three,
Of "Ready”—studied when
Some pages back we were, let's see,
I think it was 1—73.
This order comes (I mean Recover),
From aim, before the word, to fire,
When for some good, sufficient reason
To fire, it's thought, 'tis not fit reason.
186. Now,
"Shoulder Arms,"
From the Recover,
Or motion third of Ready;
With thumb and finger, piece half-cock,
And bring to shoulder steady.
188. "Fix Bayonet."

And now you will
Prepare for conflict dire.
With the left hand, you grasp the piece
At shoulder height, not higher.
Detach it slightly from your form,
And motion first of Fix is done.

189. With the right hand you quit the piece,
The left has it in charge;
Betwixt the feet, the butt is placed,
The right hand still at large.
Now change the hands,—at upper band
With right, the rifle seize;
The left, of bayonet takes hold,
Ready for what it please
To do. At motion third of Fix,
The weapon draw from out
It's sheath, and now you firmly fix
It on your rifle stout.
This done, at once you upright stand,
The rifle held with both your hands,

191. Till,

"Shoulder Arms,"

Is said.
With the left hand, you'll raise the piece;
And to right shoulder send;
The Rammer front—and then you'll seize
The stock—(right arm extend,)
Thumb and forefinger clasp the guard,
Right hand at swell of stock.

192. For second motion, as you've heard,
The left hand you will drop,
And Shoulder's finished.

193. "Charge Bayonet."

The brave man's aim,
One time, and motions two,
If rightly done, the foe you'll harm,
(Rhymes forced, I think, don't you?)
The piece with your right hand you'll lift,
   Make half face to the right;
On the left heel, your facing shift,
   Place right foot opposite
Left heel,—hollow three inches from
   The heel, I just have named;
At the same time, left hand will come
   To piece 'bove lower band.

194. For motion two, the piece you'll bring Down, barrel uppermost;
With both your hands, you do this thing;
   Your elbow left, you'll post
Against the body. Seize the stock
   At same time with right hand,
The Bayonet's point high as your eye.
   Once more I will command
You,
   "Shoulder Arms;"
   for this, you know,
Is always squeezing in.
The piece, with the left hand you'll throw
   Right shoulder 'gainst, while facing;
The Rammer to the front, of course,
   The right hand to the guard.
Left hand to height of shoulder force,
   And motion first is said.

196. Now smartly, the left hand you'll drop
   For motion two, and now
I order, "Trail Arms,"—here we stop
   Until I show you how.

197. "Trail Arms."
   One time, and motions two,
   The motion first will be
   The same as "Order Arms," the first,
   1—47 see.

198. At second motion, you'll incline
   The muzzle to the front,
Butt to the rear, its place assign,
From ground four inches, don't Get too much of a slant on it,
Which recruits always do,
Unless you wish rear bayonet,
Front rank man to run through.

199. From this to

"Shoulder Arms"

you'll come,

Done many times before;
The piece you'll raise, with the right hand
Upright,—than this no more.
This movement differs, than what's known,
From "Order Arms," where Shoulder's shown.

200. "Bayonet Unfix."

Three motions to

One time, this word demands
To start, at motions one and two,
The movements of your hands,
Are just the same as those of Fix,
On which, we back did dwell,

1—88, 1—89,
Second and first moves tell.

201. You've seized the bayonet in your hand,

You'll wrest it from the piece;
Into the scabbard thrust it then,
And now, the rifle seize
With your left hand,—the arm extend,
And "Unfix Bayonet's," at an end.

202. To

"Shoulder Arms."

Motions and times
So often used by you,
Are two, and one, for which you'll see

203. 1—91, and 2.

204. "Secure Arms."

Here is something new,
Your rifle to protect,
RHYMED TACTICS.

From rains, or damp, or heavy dew;
This movement, you'll perfect.
For motion first—133,
When "Arms Support" was tried You'll study well, as that will be
For this move, your best guide.
Except that with left hand, you'll take
The piece at small of stock,

205. And now, the second motion make.
Turn from yourself the lock,
The piece 'forenent' left shoulder place,
The butt 'gainst hip you'll bring,
At lower band the left hand place,
The thumb high as the chin.
The piece erect, but touching not
Your shoulder—then you come.

206. To motion third; here you the piece
Reverse, when this is done,
Under the left arm rests the piece,
The rammer held by thumb,
The right hand falling to its side,
And "Secure Arms," is done.

207. You'll
"Shoulder Arms,"
again. This time

Three moves does it aright;
With the left hand, you raise the piece,
At small of stock your right.
The piece erect, and slightly from
The shoulder, there you stand,
The butt against your hip will come,
Piece hold with both your hands.

208. For motions two and three, you'll read
1—41, and 2,
Since how to make these moves, indeed,
I there have taught to you.
Lieut. Kopper, 1st Heavy Artillery, N. Y. S. V.
W. S. Griffith, 7th Regt. N. Y. S. M.
210. "Right Shoulder—Shift."

You understand;
This thing, you've not had yet.
Detach the piece with your right hand
From Shoulder,—then you get
It firm with left, near lower band,
'Twixt that and the guide-sight,
And raise the piece with the left hand,
About at shoulder-height.
And let there be four inches space
'Twixt shoulder and the gun;
The right hand on the butt, you'll place,
The beak 'twixt fingers come.

211. For second motion you'll remove
Left hand, and then you'll lift
The piece to the right shoulder,—thus
You have Right Shoulder—Shift.
The lock plate up, the stock will touch
Just gently back of head,
For holding thus, you feel, you'll find
A gully Nature made;
To hold the gun by that direction;
The fact admits no contradiction.

212. Again we

"Shoulder—Arms."

Essay

To get things as they were,
The right arm straighten out, the piece
Comes perpendicular.
Having then got the piece upright,
With left hand you will seize
The piece, 'tween lower band and sight.

213

Quit the butt, if you please.
With right, the guard, you now embrace,
The left hand up you slide;
Lower the piece to Shoulder place,
Drop left hand to your side.
214. From a "Support," you're sometimes told "Right Shoulder—Shift," to come.
215. With the right hand, 'neath left fore arm,
   This movement first is done.
   The piece thus held, you seize the butt
   With left hand, by its heel;
216. You then the rifle turn about,
   The lock-plate up, you feel.
   To the right shoulder, carry it,
   Left hand still holding on;
   The muzzle will be elevate,
   Place right hand, as you've done
   At pause 210;
   Place it exactly now as then.

212—which, done,
218. The piece in both your hands will be,
   The barrel now you turn
   In front, then carry opposite
   Left shoulder; then your right,
   To small of stock, you'll gently slip
   The piece you thus hold light
   On left fore arm, as you before
   Have done at pause 1—34.
   Your right now drop down by your side,
   And Support Arms, again you've tried.

219. "Arms—at Will."
   As you please,
   Rifle seize,
   Hung by strap,
   On your back,
   Or any way,
   You like, you may,
   With either hand,
RHYMED TACTICS.

At any band,
By butt or stock,
By guard or lock,
Drag or lug it,
Roll or tug it,
It is still,
"Arms at Will," —yes, "Arms at Will."
This until
"Shoulder—Arms,"
the word you hear,
Trudging onward, never fear,
But "Arms at Will," is plain and clear.

221. "Ground—Arms." This movement next we'll try,
   It from an Order'll come;
One time, two motions—now will I
   Explain just how it's done.
222. The piece with the right hand you'll turn,
    The barrel left you send,
223. Rise up now prompt, the left foot bring
    In place the right beside,
    Your hands down to your side, you fling;
    And thus you will abide
    Till

224. "Raise Arms"
    is the word that's given,
    When cartridge box you hold,
    With left hand is this movement given,
    When, Ground Arms, you were told.
    The body bend, advance left foot,
    Even with lower band,
    Your right hand to your piece you'll put,

225. And upright you will stand.
    Your left foot now in place you'll put,
    Your piece at same time turn,
    The ramrod front, and then you'll drop,
    Left hand, left side along.
226. "Inspection of Arms,"

you commanded will be;
That the state of your arms, your Captain may see;
Since though he don't doubt, you are ready to show,
Their state from inspection, he always must know.
Uncle Sam pays him well, and hears no excuse,
If arms in the hands of his men meet abuse.

227. You'll seize the piece with the left hand,
Below and near the upper band,
   And bring in front of body;
The butt, you place your feet between,
The rammer to the rear is seen,
   To go on, now you're ready.

The muzzle, inches three from you;
The next, you well know how to do,
   'Tis place the bayonet on it.
This last, you always understand,
Is done with speed, with your left hand,
   Since, back you know, you've done it.

Then once more take, with your left hand,
The piece, quite near the upper band,
   With right hand, rammer seize;
Thumb and fore-finger, this will do,
As long before, I've shown to you,
   Which turn to, if you please.

228. One hundred sixty-one and two
Will tell you next, what next you'll do
   To draw the rammer out;
Then down the barrel let it glide,
Replace the piece along your side,
   At "Order Arms," about.
229. The Captain now, to each in turn
   Will come, his looks are gruff and stern;
   He'll swear, if all's not right.
As you he reaches, you will raise
   With right, the piece, and then you'll seize
   'Twixt lower band and sight.

   Lock to the front, the piece you'll bring,
   The left hand held to height of chin,
   The piece in front of eye.
With the right hand, the piece he'll take,
   Inspect, and then he'll toss it back,
   And then, he'll pass you by.

230. Back to the "Order Arms" you'll come,
   Till with two more, the Captain's done
   And then come to "inspection."
Return the rammer with right hand.
   (You're lucky, if you've not been damn'd,
   Or met with some correction.)

231. Perhaps
   "Fix Bayonet"
   is the word,
   That from the Captain's lips, you've heard,
   You'll see 2–27.
Fix Bayonet, as there explained,
   And then at "Order Arms" remain,
   Till other word is given.

233. If after firing has been done,
   The fact the Captain wishes known
   That you've discharged you're gun,
234. "Spring Rammers," he'll of course direct,
   No other word, you will expect
   Until, this thing, you've done.
The movement is the same, I'll state,
As shown above, (2-28,)
The rammer in the bore.

235. He now will listen for the ring,
Or he himself the rammer spring,

236. Then—back men, as you were.

I calculate,
At any rate,
The Manual is done.
I dedicate
The rhymes I make,
To him who best will learn.
Do not deviate,
But perpetrate
Each movement as I've shown,
Both small and great,
And intricate,

They all have to be known.
In doing this,
'Twon't be amiss
If back you often go,
And study well,
What here I tell,
And every motion know.
But on one move,
I do not love
That too long you should dwell,
Lest you might crack
Your side or back,
Before you'd learnt it well.

So from one to another, you'll frequently change,
Thus keep straight side and back, nor your shoulders derange.

241. You've often heard of marking time,
Though not before perhaps in rhyme;
The "how," I'll indicate
By "Mark Time—March,"
       (the word command)
On either foot, as straight you stand,
   Alternate, gravitate,*
Your body, changing leg for leg,
To bear your weight, but not a peg
   Of progress do you make,

243. Till
   "Forward March"
   commanded is;
Then forward you will straightway "big,"
The length of step you take
   Is eight and twenty inches.  Now

245. To
   "Change Step—March"
   your Captain 'll go;
When one foot coming down,
The other quickly long side bring,
That first foot then steps off again;
   And change step's plainly shown.

250. In our Loadings before, you'll readily see,
When each move we studied so accurately,
   That each part, you might well comprehend;
We could not make that speed, we would cultivate
While striving, are foes our quietus to make,
   With hot balls from their murderous hands.

So now, that great speed we may quickly acquire,
Not in loading alone, but also in fire,
   The times loading, we'll cut down to four.
But in this, as in that, each motion must be Made with the most perfect regularity,
Or the nine, we must study some more.

* Should these directions appear to any unconscionable dunce not sufficiently explicit, I can only remark that I contract for rhymes not for brains on the part of the reader to understand them.
252. 1—56—7—8—9, you'll see.
    "Load," "Handle," "Tear" and "Charge," 'twill
    Makes first of your four times. [be
1—60 and 1 and 2—and 3,
253. To "Draw" and "Ram" the next will be,
    Directed in these lines.

1—64 to 68
As done before, you'll imitate;
254. This is "Return" and "Prime."
    Now "Shoulder Arms" you will perform,
    Which next to Prime, you back were shown,
    And this ends your fourth time.

256. When you've drilled as above, till you perfectly know
    That each time and each motion, as laid down, you'll show,
    On yourself having perfect reliance,
257. "Load at Will,"
    we will try. Now in this, every man
    Most correctly will load, but as fast as he can,
    Thus you're bidding the foe full defiance.

Not a soldier in this, for his neighbor will wait,
Or his movements at all, by the next regulate,
    But perfection alone, he'll acquire.
Which done, for the firings, both direct and oblique,
    All directions below, you will find, if you seek,
    Inasmuch as we mean now to fire.

FIRINGS.

261. "Fire by Squad."
    I'll command,
    "Squad Ready and Aim,"
And "Fire"
   and "Load," these you'll do just the same
As back a few pages, you've seen.
The rear rank forward a bit will incline,
To bring their pieces front is here the design,
   For firing front rank men between.

Every piece in the Squad must blaze with one crack
When,
   "Load"
   you have heard, then each piece will come back.

262. Load, and then stand at a "Ready;"
For there is no more unpardonable folly,
   Than uncertain fire, when trying a volley;
   All must be attentive and steady.

263. "Squad Aim, Fire and Load"
   then direction will be,
264. Till time your instructor shall see.
265. "Cease Firing,"
   aloud he will say.
Now to "Shoulder" each piece very readily 'll come,
When the "Load" you're about, completely is done,
   At "Shoulder" for orders you stay.

The firing oblique, now attention demands;
   Preceded by "Caution," will be the commands
Of "Aim," when this way you're firing.
In firings, don't move like a brute or machine,
   But be sure that each time, you at something take aim,
   Like a patriot, not like a hireling.

267. In the firings oblique, when "Ready" is heard,
Your movement's the same as before at that word,

268. But after, when "Right Oblique's" said,
The two ranks will quick throw the right shoulder back,
And steadily look at the object they'd hit,
Preparing to shoot it quite dead.

269. When command comes to "Aim," each front rank will stand,
Sans deranging the feet, but aim to right hand,
At object, before they'll select;
Whilst rear rank will advance the left foot about Eight inches to right heel of man, (stick it out.) Right of file leader—recollect,

And aim to the right, whilst the body will be Inclined forward, and bent a little left knee; All this for the fire Right Oblique.

270. Left Oblique being said, your movements will be, The front rank stand fast, with his feet, as you see,

271. Whilst at left, his target he'll seek.

The rear rank will now move his right foot eight inch Towards file leader's right, as above;—never flinch,
But the body forward incline.
Right knee now is bent, proper posture to give For aiming oblique, and both firings you have Perfected, in motions and time.

272. In both of these cases, oblique left and right, At "Load," you will load with great speed and with might,
Each man as though standing alone. The rear rank at once, with their feet will assume
The position of Front, from which they've just come,
  Ere firings, we strove to make known.

278. The firing by File, is the next we will try
   In battle, by this many brave foes will die,
   Who else, in triumph might fight on.
To start, front and rear of each file fire at once,
Then, as I'll explain, the firing will bounce
Through line as before, from the right on.

274. "Fire by File, Squad Ready, and Firing Commence,"
Is the order your Captain will give at once;
At "Ready," the two ranks will take

275. The position (2–61) we have taught;
Thus, lively, at "Ready" their arms will be brought,
 Prepared the next movement to make.

276. At command numbered 4, the right file will aim
   And fire—rear man taking position the same,
   As at 1–76 I provide.

277. Then briskly they'll load, and priming again,
   Keep lively among them this popping off game,
   Whilst file standing at their left side,

278. Will "Aim" at the instant the first file brings down
   Their guns to reload, and in all things conform
   To what has been told the first file.
Third file will fire in unswerving rotation,
As the first, and the second, according to station.
Each striving the foe's front to spoil.

279. The first fire all round, never order should lack,
   But like tearing of cloth, go crack, crack, crack,
After that each man for himself.
280. Load and Fire, Fire and Load, with what speed he can,
But endeavor each fire to level a man,
And lay him aside, on his shelf.

281. "Cease Firing,"
    now the Captain will command,
Which heard by each file that comprises the band,
    Brings firing at once to dead lock.
282. Every man will at once his loading complete,
    Rear rank men will then bring together their feet,
    And shouldered all arms at half cock.

283. If now you're capable,
    The "Fire by Rank" we'll try,
Is it not probable,
    You'll do it bye and bye?
Since if you're tractable,
    This firing, you'll soon know,
Yes, every particle,
    I readily will show.

284. "Fire by Rank."

At "Ready," position you'll take as before,
    When after Ready's been said,
More carefully now, every error to shun,
If you need it, refer to 2—61,
    Where all the directions are read.

286. Now, "load" is the word; at this seventh command,
    The rear rank will Load, and Ready they'll stand;
By practice, you know this position.

287. When
    "Front Rank, Aim, Fire,"
as the rear just has done,
And after the "Load," to the "Ready," they'll come,
Of errors, I've here no suspicion.

289. Now then, rear rank, again, then, front rank again,
Then the rear, then the front, then once more the same,
'Till nature shall need some relief;
So "Cease Firing" is said,—"Dismiss the parade."
I'm satisfied well with the progress you've made,
We next tackle Lesson the Fifth.

290. To
"Fire and load kneeling," at first should be taught.

291. To one at a time, who in front will be brought
292. Of the squad, say, some three paces;
Who having received now the word of command,
His right foot will carry to rear, and right hand,
Of left heel. See that he so places

His feet in such way that in bending left leg,
His right knee to the ground, as if he would beg,
This posture he'll easy assume;
His piece he will lower, left arm on his thigh,
On the small of the stock the right hand will lie,
On right thigh butt rests I presume.

293. Supporting the piece at lower band with left hand,
Turn the right leg as far as he can command,
His knee on the ground as a pivot;
Thus on his left heel, he'll find a firm seat,
If not very wide, at least snug and neat,
Not likely by usage to give out.
294. Raise piece with the right and support with left hand,
This support you have near or at lower band,
Left elbow you rest on left thigh;
Fore finger 'neath guard—with the thumb you will cock
The rifle, then seize it at small of the stock,
Bring to shoulder, aim, and let fly.

295. As soon as you've fired, the piece you'll bring down;
With left hand support, as is readily shown,
'While 'gainst the right thigh rest the butt,
To the rear carry piece, whilst rising on knee,
Your left hand slip upward, and then you will be,
All ready to load, are you not?

296. When loaded, bring piece to the front with left hand,
The right, at the small of the stock you will stand,
Turn piece barrel uppermost now;
Half-cock, then remove the old cap, and then prime,
And return to your ranks. All done in less time
Than it takes me here to tell how.

297. The next man comes up, the same thing to go through,
Then the next, and so on, till all can it do,
Or have at least giv'n it a trying.

298. We then will pass on to a much simpler task,
For awhile to this thing attention I ask.

299. The command will be,
Fire and load lying.

300. And this, like the last, must alone be essayed,
Before men are fit to sprawl out at parade,
And fire toward a fancied foe.
Three paces in front, number one will proceed,
Come to "Order," then drop on both knees indeed,
Lik a penitent rascal, I trow.

Lower yet, lower yet, since flat on your face,
For firing this time will be nearly your place;
The piece with your left hand support;
'Gainst shoulder you bring it, and carefully aim,
(Before this you've cocked), you then fire just the same,
As firing last you were taught.

Support for your body, in this awkward fire,
You'll gain from both elbows, but carried no higher,
Than enough to well see your marks;

301. Having fired, bring piece down, and turn on left side,
Your body on left elbow still will abide,
Like "Pip," you may think, "Oh, what larks!"

The piece you bring back with butt on the ground,
With your right a cartridge is readily found,
Then throw yourself on to your back;
The rifle you now will shove back to the rear,
The muzzle t'your nose you will not hold too near,
At loading you'll soon get the knack.

302. When loading is finished, on left side once more,
On left elbow leaning, as you were before,
You'll take off the old cap, and prime;
Then raise up the piece, and yourself turn about,
Take place in the ranks, where just now you stepped out,
You've done very well for first time.

803. Through the ranks now at once these movements will go,
One by one striving hard to perfectly know,
Each movement as it is set down;

804. The bayonet exercise we will attempt,
Neglecting would be anything but prudent,
Two movements I now will make known:

805. First,
"Guard against Infantry—Guard,"
is command,
The arms at a shoulder, till now in your hand;
One time and two motions 'twill take.
On both heels you turn, make half-face to the right,
Feet square to each other, the piece—raise it slight,
Are movements to start with you make.

With left hand seize piece just above lower band;

806. Right foot to the rear, while on both feet you stand,
For firmness, your knees slightly bent,
With both hands at once you'll now lower the piece,
And at small of its stock, the right will it seize,
For defence standing now most intent.

Your arms by your sides are naturally falling,

807. Until,
"Shoulder—Arms"
your captain is calling;
At once to a "Shoulder" you'll spring;
One time and one motion you'll take, and no more,
Capt. Ned Johnson, 81st Regt. N. Y. S. V.
The heels to their place, as they were just before
The "Guard," on the welkin did ring.

308. Now,

"Guard against Cavalry—Guard,"

is the cry,

At which, with your bayonet high as your eye,

You'll repeat what above you went through,

Your right hip for right hand will form a support,

As at 193 the "charge" you were taught;

309. At "shoulder" you know what to do—

(Exactly the same as at 307,

The movements of shoulder to you I have given.)

We now in progression have reached part the third,

The manual and firings all through you have heard,

And at once can, I think, with care make advance

To that part of the school I now shall commence:

311. One rank forms your squad, to the left, from the right,

With elbow to elbow each other touch slight,

That better "alignments" you may comprehend,

Two men from your right to your front I shall send

Two paces; you quickly will then, one by one,

To the new line they've formed successively

come.

As one, two and three, I then numbers shall call

Until in succession I've finished up all,

312. On the line, to the right your head and eyes turn,

By directions I gave at first—81.

Turn back to the place, if to my great regret,

The thing then I taught, you so quickly forget.
In forming this line, you must never go past
The guide on your right, neither move up so fast,
That one step to the rear essential shall be
For new line to be formed with accuracy.

213. When this new alignment has proved a success,
And your men are in place, I'll make this address:—

814. To the
    "Front"
now at once all eyes you will cast,
Fifteen are the paces, as in lessons past;

816. When, by constant striving, this thing you can do,

817. To
    "Right" or "Left—Dress"
we will rapidly go,
Except the two men that are placed in advance.
The whole rank to align, at once we'll commence,
On these two men again—each man for himself.
But all at one time—see three hundred and twelfth,
Directions for each in that I have laid down,

320. Again, I say
    "Front,"
this, too, is well known.

321. If dress to the rear advantageous may seem,
The same rules will apply, but I cannot deem
It essential to go again over rules
That you understand, if you're men and not fools.

322. The orders alone, I now here will record,

    "Right (or left) Backward Dress,"
make sure is the word.
In making these moves be quite certain to hold
Your rifles exactly by rules you've been told.
But lest you're fatigued after practise 'tis best
That often I give "Order Arms," and then "Rest."
823. In future, while drilling, this truth I promulge,
That in common time you will never indulge,
Except by an order expressly therefor,
824. Without which, quick step is the rule and the law;
The rules for quick step, at one hundred and two,
I carefully taught, you remember, don't you?
825. The "March to the Front," is the next we select,
Move true to your guide, let each step be correct.

826. "SQUAD FORWARD,—GUIDE RIGHT," and then
"MARCH,"
is command,
Should you feel out of place, look to your right hand,
As there your best man, as guide I shall station,
I mean as a soldier, of morals no mention
I deem prudent to make; but this thing is true,
That if you march by him, I've no fault with you.

With left foot you start, marching prompt and quick step,
Your shoulder keep square on the line—that is it.
827. Touch lightly the elbow toward side of your guide,
Your arms keep in place; while if from the right side
Any pressure you feel, to that gently yield,
But left arm have given fair play and fair field,
If you lose your right touch, don't jump into place,
But gradually recover the touch you have lost.

828. Eyes to the front, length of step eight and twenty Inches. And then 1–0–2 are a plenty
829. To make to the minute, just that, and no more,
With line of direction, the shoulder keep square,
Now "Halt" and "Right dress," any error detect
That you've made in marching, and at once correct,
A perfect right line with your guide you will seek.
After "Front," we will try some marching oblique.

330. The "Right oblique, March,"
at the second command,
Make half face to the right, from that point of stand
Straight forward you go, in this new direction;
With others, your elbows have no connection;
But glance to the side toward which you're obliquing,
From that, your proper position be seeking:
Your shoulder, behind those of your right neighbor,
Thus keep in your place, sans bother or labor.

332. While marching I'll change your line of direction,

333. By the word,
"Forward—March,"
when without a fraction,
Of course, to the left you will make a half face,
And march to the front at the same steady pace.

334. The "Double quick" is now what ye
Your practice next in marching see,
But very careful you must be
In length of step and time.

The length of step of that, you know,
Is three and thirty inches, so
One sixty-five per minute go,
"With music steps will chime."
RHYMED TACTICS.

336. When
   "Double quick,"
   the word is said,
   And after
   "March"
   you'll find I add,
   At double quick you'll start off steadily. (That's for the rhyme.)

   One Hundred Six, and also Seven,
   'Tis there these steps are fully given,
   And if to learn them you have striven,
   You're not in fault this time.

337. Now to resume, see how much you
   Of all that I have told you know,
   Back
   "Quick step—March,"
   at once we go.
   (This is a thought of mine.

   Although 'twas stolen by Hardee,
   Some years before this date, you see,
   When arms were quite unknown to me,
   And I can't prove the crime.)

338. At the word "March" the step you'll take,
   Measures but inches twenty-eight,
   And so your speed you will abate,
   Conformant to quick time.

339. When "Halt" you hear the word command,
   Without a jerk in your tracks stand,
   By rules I've taught your clever band,
   At 98 and 9.

340. When double quick you marching be,
   (For this rule turn to 240.)
   Where all this thing's laid down (q. v.),
   I order you, "Mark time."
The cadence of the step don't change,
Your place in rank let naught derange,
Nor let me fear the slightest danger
at this word of mine.

That fully you don't comprehend,
How each leg I would have you bend,
And toward the ground in cadence tend,
With all you've done this time.

From direct step, to the oblique,
Sometimes, perhaps, I'll have the "cheek"
To change your march, you poor and meek
Young soldiers of the line.

Then back again, and forth and back,
I'll change you with a sudden whack,
But mind you keep the marked out track,
330 see—in fine.

March on, march on, ye valiant men,

843. Till
   "RIGHT ABOUT"
   I say, and then

Add
   "March,
   (And swear a trifle) when
   Left foot is coming down.

844. On the left foot turn clear about,
   Thus change entire your marching route,
   Then rest your weight upon right foot,
   Start with your left as known.

845. Now, "Halt," "Right dress"—and you will try
To
   "Backward March"
   by rule, whilst I
See if you come directions nigh

846. 247 shown.
847. Upon each other do not lean,
    Nor yet have any space between
    Your elbows—touching as you've seen,
     Some page or two now gone.

848. In marching to the front you'll see,
    At "shoulder arms" your arms should be,
    To keep them so, I'll have to demand rigidest attention.

849. In marching at the "double quick,"
    Your arms upon right shoulder stick,
    Unless your Captain has a trick
     Of "Trail"-ing "arms" to mention.

850. But if he wishes arms at Trail,
    Before you start, to this avail,
    He'll order so—then on you sail,
     Deserving commendation.

    If to say "Trail" he does omit,
    When starting you at double quick,
    You never then, will please forget,
     Right shoulder is direction.

    When "Halt" is said, in either case,
    Up to a "Shoulder Arms," you place
    Your piece, with speed, and soldier's grace,
    Without fear of correction.

851. Now, from a "Halt" all through the rank,
    We'll try the marching by the flank.

    "Squad, right—Face—Forward, March—is crank
     Enough for indication.

852. At the word "Face," above as said,
    To right all face, body and head,
    By rules you'll find expressly made,
     At 89's direction.
The even numbered men will then
Step to the right of the odd men,
The odd stand fast, as they do when
Such is their designation.

Thus marching by the flank in files
Of two abreast, no little toils
It takes at first—and sometimes "rules"
The best men of the nation.

353. The word to "March" will be the sign
With the left foot to start. Align
Each man upon his comrades line,
Thus marching to perfection.

354. In these last movements we've gone through
It's well I should impress on you
That, Left for Right, when you would do,
The means are just inverse.

In left, the even numbered men
Face to the left, and there remain
"In statu quo," their place retain,
As this move they rehearse.

The odd will come to their left side,
Thus till they "march," they will abide,
Both moves you now have surely tried,
The right and the reverse.

355. At head of rank place one who knows
Just how each movement always goes,
And thus to your recruits he shows,
The step to regulate.

How best your distance you will keep,
Not gain nor lose, nor get to sleep,
Nor straggle, nor get in a heap;
All these he'll obviate.
358. "Squad, Halt," and "Front."

Of this command,

359. At second, every man will stand
    Right in the tracks where his feet land,
    E'en though he deviate

From what his proper place should be,
Having, or gained, or lost, you see
Prohibition necessary
    Men to habituate.

Their proper distance to preserve,
Neither to right nor left to swerve,
But every marching rule observe,
    Though it be intricate.

360. At third command each man I'll thank,
    Face to the left, if by right flank
They've marching been—then in one rank,
    The march they terminate.

If by left flank the march was made,
A right face make, if I'm obeyed,
In one rank form, as before said,
    (Old soldiers emulate).

Then, as you face, each rear-rank man,
Steps to his place quick as he can;

361. Now change direction by the plan
    Next verse I'll promulgate.

362. "By File Left—March," which order heard,
The first file starts upon the word;
A small arc make, if they've not erred,
    The next file coming up

Wheels just where wheeled the file before,
Elbows still touch as heretofore;
Then others come after these four,
    But don't wheel too abrupt.
The inside man his steps makes short,
Just as he's turning (that's the sort),
To this he always must resort
          To keep his comrades up.

When this you know, file to the right,
Is done by means almost—not quite
The same—save wheeling to the right—
          'Tis just the same, you see.

364. When marching,
          "Squad, by the Right Flank,"

And
          "March"
          I say, then both your ranks.
Make a right face, and march on crank,
          And do it rapidly.

365. If, when you face to left or right,
It brings the rear-rank front in sight,
Into one rank the men step light,
          As shown in 360.

Whenever in one rank you form,
See that your numbers don't come wrong;
That two's on left of right's still come,
          No blunder let there be.

366. If by the left flank made to face,
The even, left of odd a pace,
At once we'll then assume their place;
          (This when squad's faced to rear).

If by the right flank you have cause,
Too much the odd, without a pause,
To right of even step. These laws,
          Make all the movement clear.

367. At "Shoulder Arms" these things you do,
But sometimes for relieving you,
We'll try "Support"—it may be true
          That change will give you cheer.
368. All this—the marching now I mean—
At "double quick" should oft be seen;
Practice will make it "all serene,"
Or so it will appear.

371. There seems no need I should detail
That "double quick" your arms you trail;
Or, at a "shoulder" bear, 'tis stale
If 'tis so oft repeated.

In various ways these things we'll act,
That every part we may enact,
With times and motions all exact,
As oft I have entreated.

WHEELINGS.

377. We'll now study wheelings,
Of which there are two,
From halts, or in marching,
Both which you must know;
The first on "fixed pivots,"
As thus it is named,
The second is "moveable,"
"Pivot" proclaimed.

378. If from order of battle
You wish to proceed,
To order in column,
The first you will need;
Or if, vice versa,
You've cause to repair,
'Tis in the same way,
But done "au contraire."

379. You'll find that the second
In marching is tried,
In changing direction
Adverse to the guide.
380. In wheels from a halt,
The pivot marks time;
Thus turns in his place,
A movement sublime.
This man, called the pivot,
You'll find of great use,
If steady and sober,
Not cross or obtuse;
   In short, he's an "institution."

381. In wheeling while marching,
The pivot takes steps,
Entirely with reference
To time the squad keeps:
Take nine inches for Quick,
Eleven for Double,
To clear wheeling point,
Without any trouble.

382. Let the wheeling-flank man
Take full twenty-eight,
Or 33 inches,
According to gait.

383. On the wheeling flank put
A man of some gump,
And
   BY SQUAD"—"RIGHT WHEEL"—"MARCH,
Well try at a jump.

384. Now the rank will step off,
By their left foot led,
All the time to the left,
Inclining the head;
Pivot man marks the time,
In order to keep
In perfect accordance
With wheeling-man's step.
This, the twenty-eight inch,
   And so to be kept;
Now he never will pinch
The man on his right,
Whom his elbow's against,
But just touch him light,
Give no cause for complaint;
Left shoulder advance,
Whilst his eyes 'long the line
He'll now and then glance.

385. Other men in the Squad
With elbows feel light,
But just touching the lads
That march on their right:
While each step will comport
To marching flanks pace,
And their steps growing short,
According to place;
Those nearest the pivot
Will shortest steps make,
Nor the farthest forget
T' elongate their gait.

386. We will keep up this wheel,
For several times round,
And at last at the place
We first left—be found;

387. Then the wheel 'tother way
By same rules you know,
Which when done, then we may

388. To
"Squad Halt,"
now go.

389. At "Halt," every man
Standing fast in his tracks,
(Since 't is a bad plan
To move forward or back ;)
The Captain now goes
To the marching flank's side,
Station'g as he knows,
In right place the left guide,
The pivot stands fast,
But his shoulders conform,
To the line that at last,
The left guide is on.

890. "LEFT DRESS,"

at this call
Every man in his place,
In line now will fall,
To a perfect left dress.

One rule, now in place,
Once for all I will tell,
In wheeling you dress
To the way you don't wheel.

892. One other—'t is this:
Wheels from halts you will see,
Toward pivot—don't miss,
That your touch still shall be.
But eyes tother way,
Toward the marching flank's end
For guidance you may,
Aye! you must always send

893. The wheel on a march,
On a pivot not fixed,
Thus forming an arc,
We had best attempt next,

894. "RIGHT WHEEL,"

is command

895. Spoke, when yet paces four,
From wheeling point grand,
The whole company are;

896. Then,
"MARCH," and no more;
Here, the wheel execute.
(See 384
For directions minute,)
Save only that now,
   Touch of elbow 'll remain,
Toward marching flank, so
   The right place to sustain.
The pivot or guide.
   Just feeling the elbow
Of him by his side,
   Marching now in a bow,
Takes steps inches nine,
   And is thus gaining ground,
For all of the line,
   As by practice is found.
The middle of rank
   Will bend slightly to rear,
In doing this prank,
   (That's a wrong word, I fear.)

396. While marching flank man,
   Over ground we must pass,
Casts eyes as he can—
   He takes steps as in last.

397. The wheel being done,
   Command next that you'll hear
Is
   "Forward"—and March,

398. Upon which it is clear,

399. That forward you go,
   As your Captain now goes,
'Tis simple, you know
   To be following your nose.
Each man the old gait
   Will at once now resume,
Quick Step—(twenty-eight)
   As e'er wheelings were done.

400. Direction to change
   To the side of the guide,
This way we arrange,
   As command will decide,
"Left" (or right)—"turn," and "march,"
Are the words of command.

401. The left,—we will see
If we can understand

402. When "march" is pronounced
As the rank ought to turn,
The guide, will at once
Face to left you will learn.
Move on the new way,
Without altering his step,
The other men—they
New direction will keep,
Attained by a turn,
At double quick step,
Which done—then their head and
Eyes turn toward the guide,
And retake the touch
Of the elbow, that side.
Alignments being made
By each man in his place,
Front—will come his head,
And resumed the old pace.

403. The wheels and turns we've now gone through,
And practised o'er with care,
In double quick we now will do,
So for that time prepare.

The rules by which you'll execute,
These movements in that time,
Are those you found me institute
Quite early in this rhyme.

The length of steps of course increased,
(All which you knew before),
The rule, however, you'll find placed
At number 1—0—4.
406. Thus at the "Double Quick" and run,
    These moves you will repeat,
    And sometimes, for a bit of fun,
    With knapsack, all complete.

407. By constant practice you will come
    Thus loaded to go o'er
    Five or six miles, with trouble none,
    And that, within an hour.

END OF SCHOOL OF THE SOLDIER.
School of the Company.

In the School of the Company, never neglect
What the School of the Soldier has taught you;
Since you'll readily see, if you'll please to reflect,
That the study we've past, has had for its object,
Preparation for this that now I select,
And to which I have gradually brought you.

4. Now,
   "In Each Rank Count Two's"
   —is the word of command;
   You're in line, as by previous direction,
5. Both men of each file, front and rear, understand,
   Together we'll count. You commence at right-hand,
   And, "One," "Two," and "One," "Two," till all through your band
   Odd and evens are known to perfection.

As your platoons and sections you now regulate,
   First platoon, you'll be sure to remember,
   Even-numbered in files, must be accurate,
   With this done, you'll proceed, intent and sedate,
   To perform the first movement, which I indicate.
8. You're now standing—your arms at an order:

9. "Attention Company," "Shoulder Arms"—and then,
   "To the rear open order," I'll say.
   At command the fourth, to the rear of the men
   Step your right and left guides—four paces—and when
   This is properly done—but not until then—
I add, "March." The front rank then may

11. Stand fast in its tracks, looking straight to the front,

12. While the rear will step back to the guide.
In this movement, your steps there's no need to count,
Align yourselves carefully on your Sergeant;
16. Which done, the left guide, at the order to "Front,"
To his place in the rear makes a stride.

18 To all the alignments, we now must attend,
That you may arrive at perfection:
By file—and together—I'll have to command,
Obliquing, and backward, to all you'll attend,
That each time, the movement before, you'll amend,
And "Dress" with no cause for correction.

But the rules are the same we've studied before,
See 317, and along there;
The rules I've there given, I'll dwell on no more
Than just to refer there—since I'm very sure
That to work at them here would be a sad bore,
So well have we done them elsewhere.

26. The manual, with open rank,
In this order go through,
The times and motions, you'll not thank
Me more to give to you.
"Present Arms," is the first, you know,
And next, you come to "Shoulder;"
While then, the next that you will do,
Of course, is come to "Order."
To "Ground Arms," next I will request,
And then, your arms you "Raise."
Again, a "Shoulder" will be best;
"Support Arms," is next phase.
"SHOULDER," again, as heretofore;
"FIX BAYONET" 's then done;
And then, with care, again once more,
To "SHOULDER ARMS" you'll come.
"CHARGE BAYONET," next in order 'll be;
Then "SHOULDER ARMS," then "TRAIL;"
Then "SHOULDER ARMS," again I'll see,
For "UNFIX" now I hail.
"SHOULDER," again—you'll know that part;—
"SECURE ARMS," now you try;
Then "SHOULDER"—do it quick and smart;—
"LOAD IN NINE TIMES," say I.

28. "Close order—MARCH." The manual done,
To close ranks is correct;
The rear rank, now, march up; each man
To file leader, direct.
Then more alignments we'll essay:
Oblique, and left, and right—
All which you'll practice constantly,
Nor either movement slight.
"IN PLACE REST;" also, "REST," alone,
You very well do know;
At 72 the thing is shown,
To which I refer you.

42. Your arms, perhaps, you may have stacked;
Perhaps they 're in your hand;
And if the latter is the case,
"Attention," I command.

48. And add, "Company—SHOULDER ARMS,"
The firings to go through;

44. "LOAD IN NINE TIMES," will be the first
That I shall ask of you.

251, and so along,
These movements all rehearse;
Remember them—you won't go wrong,
Nor make me fume and curse.
45. Then, "LOAD AT WILL," we will review—
Shown at 256,
Which, when 't is proved to me by you,
You know, I will affix

48. The "FIRE BY COMPANY"—to what
Already you are taught.

49. "COMMENCE FIRING"—the second word;
Your Captain now is brought
Six paces to your rear; at once
First Sergeant backs the same;
The Captain's back of the centre,
While Sergeant will remain
Back of his interval in line,
And now, these words are said:

50. "Company, ready," and then "AIM,
And "FIRE!"—You 're not afraid,

51. Then "LOAD," you now will load at will,
Your pieces then adjust
At "Ready." Hold them so until

52. "Company—AIM—FIRE," must Be heard by you; and after "LOAD;"
Then load away, my man;
The shot that does his country good,
Will load quick as he can.

53. Attention you will always give
To ev'ry Captain's freak;
You'll have his notions to forgive,

54. Should he say, "Right oblique,"
Or "Left"—'t is always just the same.
The word you'll ever hear
Preparatory to the "AIM;"
Or he's in fault, I fear.

55. The "Fire by file," will be the next,
275 't is shown;
I must allow I shall be vex'd
If by you it's not known.
58. The "fire, by rank," we've also seen, 285, and so on;
   Now, I assure you, I don't mean
   To repetitions go on.

63. When to "Cease fire," the sound you hear,
    You'll know just what you'll do:
    Come to a "ready,"—do you hear?—
    Then see, 282.

Not that I mean that you must turn
Back on the book in practice,
But every portion so well learn,
You'll need no written tactics.
My book I've no ambition to Make take the place of all,
But some moves I'll impress on you;
Not only that, but make you do;
Show you in such a way, 'tis true,
That though some other way you knew,
Still all I tell, you will allow,
Plainly is told, or I'll outgrow
The name I bear—that's  "Gov."

68. "Face by the rear rank"—"Company,
    About face," is command.
    At first, the Captain'll place himself
    To face right file; there stand.
    Now, through the Captain's interval,
    Sergeants at once will go
    And place themselves, faced to the rear,
    As the Captain will show.

The first Sergeant, one pace behind
    The Captain, will find station,
    Until the word, "About face"'s heard;
    And now then, I will mention,
Both ranks at once will turn about,
    Thus facing to the rear;
    The Captain, then, steps to his place;
    First Sergeant will appear
70. Directly back of him, in place.
    You're ready, now, to fire;
Which done, again we'll change our front,

73. To get 'round, as we were.
    "Face by the front rank—Company—
    "About Face"—is the word;
Captain and Sergeants, now, we'll do
    What, just above, you've heard:
Step 'round to what has been the front,
    Until the "about face;"
Then, when the men have faced about,
    They both will take their place
On right of front and rear ranks,
    And keep both ranks in line;
No man will move from out the place
    That to him I assign.

84. To march in Line of Battle, will Require your attention:
Your shoulders keep square to the front—
    You've often had direction.

89. "Company, forward March," is said;
    Then all will move with life,
The left foot first, 'tis thus you will Advance to battle's strife.
Your elbows you will barely touch,
    Don't crowd, but step with ease;
You step just eight-and-twenty inch,
    And quick step, if you please.

93. Two paces rear of the rear rank,
    Your file closers will be;
    Don't lose the step, but if you should,
    By Sergeants guided be.

97. That marching by the front you go,
    With no need of correction;
Try, straight at once, a long ways go,
    In just the same direction.
100. "Company, Halt," we all went through
     In Soldier's School—320;
The rules the same are, here as there,
     And studied are in plenty.

101. The march oblique, in battle line,
     You need not think it odd,
If told the rules are still the same
     As obliquing by the squad;

102. The rules for which, you know you'll find
     In Soldier's School—331.
If each man every step will mind,
     The thing at once will then be done.

104. Then change to "Forward, March"—in which,
     Again, your elbows touch,
And march straight forward—shoulders square,
     So do not change too much.

105. In oblique march, you'll find your guide
     The side t'ward which oblique's made;
Then, when you change to forward march,
     He's back again, 't is said,
To either side on which he was Before the march oblique;
This is a rule that's general,
     Your guide on that side seek.

If you should chance to slightly lose

107. Your proper place in line,
     By taking too great length of step,
     Or taking steps too fine,
Don't lose the cadence of the step,
     But make it short or long,
According as you've lost your place,
     By stepping somewhat wrong.
110. To "Mark time, March," will sometimes make
A part of drilling programme;
Then Forward march, then Double quick,
All which you'll do the same
As in the school we've past was taught;
Those rules, you'll ever find,
Must never, never, be forgot,
But constant in your mind.

Not difficult to do;
But seldom do you march that way,
For exercise, you know.

119. Since, if it seems you must retreat,
And best men sometimes must,
"Company, about—Face," is the word;
And then, you know, I trust,

120. At "Forward—March," now you will keep Yourselves in perfect line—

125. Of all of which you've heard me speak,
At 88 and '9.

128. When you are marching, and it seems
That backward you must go,
"Company, right about," is said,
And "March," which said, you'll know
To face directly to your rear,
And march without delay;

131. And then, again, you may be faced
To march the other way.

133. When marching in Quick Time, your arms,
Right shoulder shift, are at,
The distance 'twixt the ranks will be Just sixteen inches. That,

By the rear rank will be done,
By shortening their step
A trifle at the start—'tis thus
They regulate the gap.
BHYMED TACTICS.

In Double Quick, ten inches more,
Say twenty-six in all;
The rear rank regulates its step,
To make this interval.

184. Whenever to a "Halt" you come,
At once close up your ranks;
To shoulder arms you bring your piece.
We'll now march by the flank.

185. "Company, Right face—Forward, March."
186. First Sergeant takes his stand
In Captain's place, in the front rank,
Captain to his left hand;
When to a right face all have come,
The front rank this will do,
By rules in School of Soldier—shown,
Number 352.

The rear rank takes side-step to right,
And doubles in same way;
The even-numbered men will be
On right of odd. Thus they Will stand—four men aligned,
Elbow to elbow, too;
'Tis in this way it is designed
You stand: 1—2—1—2.

187. The file closers will also take
A side step to the right,
That when the ranks are formed, they'll be
Two paces from rear, quite.

188. At the word march, as said above,
Move briskly, in quick time;
Captain and Sergeant, as I've shown
Aforetime, in this rhyme.

File closers opposite their place,
In line of battle shown;

140. When marching by right flank you do,
The left is quickly known,
Since by directly inverse means,
That movement will be done.

148. You’re marching by the flank, my man,
And now, it needful seems
That line of battle you should form,
We do it by this means:

Command will be this—

149. “On the right
By file”—then, “into line,”
And after when the “March,” is said,
The rear rank will mark time.

The Captain, and the Orderly
(As “Covering Sergeant” known),
Turn to the right; six paces march—
The new line thus is shown.

To properly align the men,
As up by files they come,
The duty is of these two men;
The rest is this way done:

149. The first file of the front rank men,
March straight on ’till they’ve passed
The place where just their Captain turned—
Take care, now—not too fast.

Turn to the right; then march until
Two paces from new line;
The even number shortens step
To go the odd behind.

The odd man, now, will take his place
In line, ’long Captain’s side;
The even takes a step oblique,
And to his place will glide.

Thus, in the front rank, now you have
The Captain and two men;
The other front files, coming up
Into their places; then,
Are careful that, before they turn,
They 're even with their place;
Then march directly to the line,
And cross, when off two pace.

Thus each file, in succession, will
Repeat the movement given,
For the first file, above set down;
Odd passing behind even.

When two files of the front rank men
Are properly aligned,
The rear rank starts, and will go up
Where they'll the Sergeant find.

Repeating for the rear rank, thus,
What the front rank's gone through,
The Sergeant seeing that they stand
In line, both straight and true.

150. When you are marching by left flank,
"Left, into line," 't will be;
In this case, when you reach the line,
Odd shortens steps, you see.

The even numbers then proceed
To take their proper station;
The odd then take the step oblique,
Completing the formation.

151. One at a time, your ranks, at first,
This movement will attempt;
It thus is easier learned by you,
Although more time is spent.

153. If that last move you now have learned,
Another we'll go through:
"By company," and "into line,"
And "March," we'll try and do.
RHYMED TACTICS.

You 're marching, now, by the right flank;
When this command is heard,
154. Your First Sergeant will keep straight on;
The men will, at the word,
Advance the right shoulder, and take
Direct route for the line;
This they will do at double quick,
And march, 'till they opine

That with the Sergeant they are up;
From him the step they take,
155. Their eyes they turn direct in front,
And line of battle make.

156. The rear rank will be sure to keep
Their proper place throughout,
Arriving with front rank in line,
At the same time, about.

157. When all the men have reached the line,
"Guide, left," will be the word;
158. The Second Sergeant, to front rank
Will go, soon as 't is heard.

159. When from the left flank this move's made,
"Guide, right," is the direction;
Then, on the Covering Sergeant, you
Will make your line's correction.

160. In column, thus, by company,
In front, the left, or right,
The First and Second Sergeants are
The guides to keep you straight.

161. "By platoon, into line," we 'll try;
This, from a flank, you see;
Above's command, with one word more,
And that, to "March," will be.
162. By the same rules, the movement's done,
   As that above, we've seen,
The First Lieutenant passing through
   The opening, between

   The two platoons, as they come up;
   If from right flank they come,
Around the left of his platoon——
   If from the left 'tis done.

163. At the command "Guide left," or "Right,"
The guide of each platoon
   Will see that he's in his right place;
He can't get there too soon.

164. The right guide of the company,
   For first platoon will serve;
The left guide of the company,
   The next in place preserve.

165. Thus, in a column, by platoon,
   One guide you have, to each,
On the left flank, if right in front;
   If left, the right he'll reach.

166. The file closers of each platoon,
   Their places still maintain,
In all the movements we go through,
   As in the line the same.

168. These movements we must often try,
   From marching, as from halt,
That perfect we may sometime be,
   And move without a fault.

170. In marching by the flank, we'll try—
   Support arms? Yes; and when
We're marching in the line, 't will be,
   Right shoulder, now and then.
171. The company being at a halt,
    In line of battle, now,
By wheeling, we will try and see,
    How to platoons we go.

172. Command—"By platoon, right wheel, March,"
    Lieutenant will pass 'round
The left; then front of the centre
    Of his platoon, he's found.

The Captain, front of first platoon,
    At once will take his post;
First Sergeant takes the Captain's place,
173. And there he will stand fast.

Right front rank man, of each platoon,
    To the right now will face;
About where left of each platoon,
    Will come when wheeled, is place

For them to stand, until the wheels
    Almost to them are made;
174. When "Platoon, halt," will be command,
    And nothing more is said

Till the two guides their stations take,
    On left of each platoon,
175. When chiefs, two paces outside them,
    Station themselves. This done,

176. "Left, Dress," will then be the command,
    And after "Front," the chief
Of each platoon will place himself,
    Or rather, to be brief,

178. Will stand two paces to the front,
    In centre of platoon;
And now, that this thing we have learned,
    To left wheel we will turn.
We do not stay till we get back
To line, from the platoon,
But, to facilitate our work,
We are in line, assume.

The command, for this movement, now,
"By platoon, left wheel," is,
And "March." The rules, to make the move,
You surely cannot miss.

The left front man, of each platoon,
Round to the left, will face;
The guides of each platoon, in this,
On right will take their place.

The chiefs of each platoon, in this,
Take places as before;
The guide is on the right, you know;
And this move now is o'er.

Again we are in line, suppose;
Now, to the right we'll break,
"By platoon, right wheel—March," the word;
This move you back, did make.

At paragraph 172,
See Right wheel, by platoon,
Only that here, the pivot man
Marks time, and will conform

To movement of the marching flank;
And, when the wheel's most made,
"Forward," and "March—guide left"'s the word
Immediately obeyed.

Straight to your front, you now will go,
The step, that of quick time;
The guides, on left of each platoon,
Their places I assign.
187. Your elbows touching to the left,
    Just lightly—as you’re taught;
The step, you carefully will see,
    Is not too long or short.

195. Your company is broken
    To right, as I have spoken;
And now, we’ll try and march in any way we please;
The order that, at first,
    Upon your ears will burst,

197. Is, "Column forward, guide left—March"—’t is done with ease.

The leading guide will fix
    His gaze on stones or sticks,
Or some two points in range, exact in his direction;
    By guidance in this way,
You’ll quickly see, he may
    Keep his line straight and true, without other correction.

198. Step steadily and firm;
    All feet, as they come down,
Striking the ground exact, with guide and all the line;
    Your elbows will abide,
Just touching, toward the guide,
    While directly to the front, your gaze you will confine.

The man that’s next the guide,
    Be careful he don’t stride
More than the eight-and-twenty inch I’ve above set down;
    But give him elbow room;
You never will presume
    To crowd upon your guide, as you are marching on.
200. Meantime, this leading guide,
The rules that I prescribe
For him to keep the points, and the cadence of the step;
He'll ever bear in mind—
Since thus he'll always find
His ranks are all in order, and the direction kept.

201. The guide that is behind him,
If in his place, you'll find him
Following the knapsack of the guide that goes ahead;
His distance from him, won't
Exceed his platoon's front;
Nor greater must it be, as I before have said.

202. If, like a stupid fool,
He should forget this rule,
And lose or gain in distance; he will not make a jump;
But his step graduate,
Till distance, accurate,
Again he has acquired—and proved himself a trump.

203. If, by gross inattention,
(This thing I would not mention,
Only that such faults are very reprehensible),
He swerves to left or right,
He'll strive, with all his might,
To gain place in march, by change almost insensible.

204. If chief or guides neglect
These rules, they must expect
Uncertainties in marching—in short, every evil;
Their men will march awry—
Their guides be nowhere nigh
Their proper place or step. In short, they raise the d—l.
205. If guides' steps are too long,
    Or short, or don't conform
To principles of the step, we studied back, you know;
206. Or, if they should neglect
    To keep their points correct,
Your lines will all be crooked, and wavering you'll go.
    You must remember, all;
    No point, however small,
But on your mind must be impressed, ere to the wars you go;
Not Wellington, nor Nap.,
Nor any other chap;
If you neglect these rules, in war could put you through.

212. To change direction, now,
    In marching, we'll see how;
You're marching with the right in front, the guides on your left flank;
To properly do this,
    'Twill never be amiss,
That markers should be station'd where first you'll wheel the rank.

213. As you are marching by
    This marker, guide will try
To so direct his march, as barely the breast to touch
    Of the marker; then the word,
214. "Right wheel," and "March," is heard;
    In this wheel, the pivot man will take his steps in such A way, that he'll conform
    To what the guides perform,
And gain ground by making steps of full nine inches long.
He'll lightly feel the man
That's on his left. He can
Thus make a curve, and keep his ranks from ever moving wrong.

Now, this thing being done,
"Forward" and "March" will come;
All of which we, most carefully, have studied before;
Turn and see "Soldier's School,"
To find out the rule,
Number 398, and along there, some more.

Leading guide will now take,
And his march regulate,
By sighting some objects—as before we have known;

Now the second platoon,
Will reach wheeling spot soon,
And careful repeat what to first platoon has been shown.

When to the left you wheel,
Touch to the right, you'll feel;

And, by means just inverse to the last we've been through;
When this you've conducted,
As I have instructed,
The command will be given, "Guide left"—it is true.

In School of the Soldier,
Remember, I told you
About changing direction in double quick time:
See 404,
As since there is the law
For making that movement—as I've writ in my rhyme.
See 402,
For what you will do
When turning (not wheeling) you will have to perform;

Then each sub-division
Will move with precision,
And turn just in place, as their leaders have done.

Each chief will take care,
His division is square
With the line of direction, without negligence;
With this view, he will face
Right around in his place,
Soon as platoons before him their wheelings commence.

You will readily see,
How bad it will be,
Should pivots of any division not clear
Just the true wheeling point;
Thus your ranks you disjoint,
And awkward and clumsy, your wheelings appear.

Eleven inches, or nine,
Just according to time
In which you are marching, will length of step be
That first man will take,
All these wheelings to make,
And in line of direction come accurately.

"Column—HALT," at command,
In the place you will stand,
That you may chance to be in when this word is said.
If you've marched properly,
Just right you will be;
Thus proving that proper attention you've paid.
284. If your place you have lost,
    Gone too slow or too fast,
    And at halt you attempt a correction to make,
    That fault of your own
    On some other rank's thrown,
    And others thus suffer from your clumsy mistake;

285. Having now made a halt,
    And corrected the fault;
    That is, presuming that a fault you have found,
    You will get into line
    By a left wheel, this time,
    The details of which I'll proceed to expound.

286. At first, to "Left Dress,"
    Which done with success,
289. "Left, into line, wheel," and to "March," I command;
    The guides stand in place,
    While to a left face,
    The front man on the left of each platoon will stand,

    The platoons will wheel,
    On the same principle
    As wheels from a halt—seen at 194;
    When the platoons appear
    To the line to be near,

241. First Lieutenant will now,
    As a file closer, go
    Round the left, and in rear of the line take his place;
242. The Captain will repair
    To the right of line; there
243. Will command you, at once, to come to "Right Dress."
Now, then, "Front" is the word
Most likely to be heard,

And "Guides, Poets," will follow—if I judge aright;
The Sergeants, one and two,
Then to their places go—
And now you are ready in line to show fight.

When the left is in front,
And we happen to want
To form, to the right, in line of the battle;
"Right, into line, wheel," and
To "March," is the command,
In the doing of which there’s no trouble at all.

Then "Platoon, Halt"'s the word,
That after will be heard,
When from line of battle the platoon is paces three;
Platoon second will halt,
And if chief's not in fault,
Resumed as file closer his place will then be.

Captain will quickly run,
When this command is done,
To the point where the left of the company will rest;
And as he then will stand,
"Left, Dress," he will command,
And thus the alignment will be put to the test.

Now that you’re all aligned,
Your places well defined,
The next command will "Front," be, and "Guides, Poets," afterward.
Both these you know so well,
I need not on them dwell,
But will trust to your remembering what you’ve so often heard.
Then you'll halt, as before,
Nor from your places stir,
But this time "Left, Dress," is the word of command;

"Front," will then follow next,
But do not be perplexed

If "Guides, Posts," I expect you'll at once understand.

You'll remember I've said,
In what back you have read,
How essential it is each platoon should preserve

Exact wheeling distance;
That in no circumstance,

From true line of battle it should one fraction swerve.

You have, back, heard me state,
(You'll see 288,)
About wheeling in marching, and all that, you know;

So, if I repeat here,
All that there does appear,

My book to the dogs you would certainly throw.

If each lesson you'll learn
As you're going along,

I shall seldom be pained by referring you back;
But I have, now and then,
Back to turn you, my men,

Lest in reading before, you have been somewhat slack.

Without making a halt,
And without any fault,
You may come into line by the left wheel, you'll see;

And to "March." I appeal

To the dullest among you, can aught plainer be!
262. Now, the wheel being made,
"Forward, March," will be said,
And a "Guide, right," (or "left,") as you happen to be;
Then you'll strike the old gait,
With a step twenty-eight
Inches long, and you're right, as you'll very soon see.

263. On the side of the guide,
Your touch will abide—
Only elbows, you know; there, that's all correct;
Then, 't will be great relief,
If your sergeants and chief,
Their places in line will always recollect.

265. You're now marching in line,
And it is my design
To "break into platoons," and reform company;
The First Lieutenant, now,
Round to the front will go,
266. And direct his platoon to "mark time," you will see.

267. Being done, "March" is heard,
Then, without other word,
First platoon marches on, in the line, as it was;
Now then, to the left flank,
Passing by the front rank,
268. Covering Sergeant will go, without any pause.

269. First Lieutenant will seek
To direct "Right, oblique,"
And "March," as soon as the first platoon has passed;
Now to make their steps short,
Will be his men's first thought,
Lest in getting to column they move up too fast.
They'll so manage their pace,
That exact wheeling space

270. They'll have, ere Lieutenant gives order to "Forward,"
Adding "March," at the time,
That the guide of his men
Covers guide that's ahead, and with him does accord.

271. When the left is in front,
By the same way you won't
Get into platoons, unless you are perverse;
But platoons first and second,
If rightly I've reckoned,
Change motions, thus forming by means just inverse.

In this case, the left guide
Changes to the right side
Of platoon the second, while right guide will stay
On first platoon's right,
This being the site
Where he stands when in line of the battle, alway.

273. You're now on the go
In platoons, you know,
And to form back in line, desirable seems;

274. "First platoon, right oblique,"
While the second will keep,

276. After "March," going straight ahead; by this means,
'Twill catch up with the first,
And when there, almost,
The Captain will command the platoon in his charge
To "Mark time," and then
Their obliquing is done,
And into line they will shortly emerge.
280. When the left is in front,
The Captain then won't Give the command of \textit{forward}, as he's done before;
But the Lieutenant, will,
The movement to fulfill;
\textbf{And the Captain adds} "\textit{March,}" \textbf{when the move-} ment is o'\textit{er}.

283. If too long you should dwell,
On the marking time, well
\textbf{(To the column in rear, these remarks I address,)
You will readily see,
From your place you will be,
When obliquing is finished; you thus make a} mess.

284. Your steps you'll not shorten,
Platoons to be brought in,
\textbf{Too much, or the very old Harry you'll raise;
And platoons in your rear,
You will throw out of gear,
Make them gain or lose distance; so the book} says.

285. Should you oblique too much,
\textbf{(Should you make any such Intolerable blunder, I should be ashamed;}
\textbf{An obliquing then back,
You'd at once have to take,
Get in place as you could, and be very much} blamed.

286. Now the chief of platoon,
When obliquing is done,
\textbf{Has to face to his men, if he would succeed}
To bring them in their place,
\textbf{Without steps to retrace,
Since their march he can't see, with the back of} his head.
287. When with companies two,
   All this movement you do,
   The ones that march forward, true time and step keep;
   And they'll always do this,
   Not an inch of ground miss,
   Even though they come close to the ones that oblique.

288. 'T is the last grain of sand,
   Breaks the camel's back, and
   Little errors of steps, throw divisions awry;
   So each man must take care,
   And of errors beware,
   'T is easily done, if you only will try.

289. Such a case may arise,
   As that, to your surprise,
   Your road, or your path, somewhat narrow will be;
   Yet you want to keep on
   In platoons. Well, 't is done
   By breaking off files to the rear, comfortably.

290. Such a case, we'll suppose,
   Then, as every one knows,
   "Two files from" the "left, to" the "rear," I'll command;
   (It may be, from the right,) But this case I will cite,
   At first, till the movement you do understand.

   At the "March" you'll commence,
   If you have any sense,
   (To the files that break off, this statement is made,)
   To mark time, till the rest, That were marching abreast,
   Have cleared your right flank, by their marching ahead.
RHYMED TACTICS.

Outer shoulder advance,
    And you will come at once,
To your place, in the rear of the ranks that have passed,
    The odd number must be,
Back of third file you see,
    While in rear of the fourth, the even is cast.

292. Now, if still you’ve not room,
    To march on by platoon,
Two files, more or less, we will break off again;
    Then the first we broke off
Will move far enough
    To the right for these others to places attain

293. On their left; thus you see,
    Front, diminished, will be.
Should you choose, more files you can send to the rear;
    It is an ugly move,
And it’s one I don’t love,
    Since to march by the flank, does plainer appear.

But now, since it is done,
    Back to line we must come,
"Two files into line," and then "March," is command,
    When right back into place,
You will your steps retrace;
    That is, files from the rear that are on the left hand;

295. While two files that remain,
    Will then step back again,
And will cover the files where they were before,
    The two files now in line,
Did commence to mark time,
    They’ll go to the left, just enough, and no more.
297. This movement you can do
    With four files, or with two,
Or with six—or with eight, for the matter of that;
    But, no longer I'll dwell
On what you know so well,
Since, as I said above, I dislike it, somewhat.

    The man who first practised
Such villainous tactics,
As to break files to rear, by me is abhorred;
    If he e'er lost his breath,
By a natural death,
The gallows lost him, and he his reward.

    I will just tell the guide,
Who is on the left side,
Or the right, or wherever the files are broke from,
    On front rank he will close,
As to rear the file goes;
When they come into line, he will have to make room.

305. From side of direction,
    You'll make your selection
Of files, to break off to the rear, in these moves;
    That the whole of your ranks,
From the front to the flank,
May easily pass, as I've hinted above.

306. March the column in route,
    Now, without a doubt,
It is time we were taught the way to perform;
    Steps one hundred and ten
In a minute, take, when
To the route-step the column you've called on to turn.
“Column forward—Guide left,”
With the “route step;” then shift
Your arms as you please, when to that is annexed
The word “March.” Then, you know,
As you please you will go,
Nor with cadence of step be a moment perplexed.
Arms at will, as you’ve seen
At two hundred nineteen,
In “School of the Soldier,” when Manual was taught;
Then your rear rank will so
Time their steps, that although
They keep moving, yet from front rank they’ll be brought,

About twenty-eight inch,
Or thirty at a pinch,
But enough on each other’s heels not to tread;
Thus you’ll march as you please,
The book says “at ease,”

But see that your ranks don’t get intermixed.

When you change direction,
At Captain’s suggestion,

All you have to look out for is to keep near your place;
While, instead of the nine
Inch step, it is fourteen,

That the pivot-man keeps, to preserve proper space.

In long marches, the route-step you will be about,
If your Captain or Colonel, deems it to be wise;
You can then sing a song,
Bradbury’s “Marching Along,”
Should you chance to know it, or have “free copies.”
RHYMED TACTICS.

310. When to pass to cadence—
Step 'tis time to commence,
Your Captain will first get your arms all in place,
"Quick time—March," he'll then say,
When you'll close right away,
311. Reduce twenty-eight to sixteen inches space.

312. When in marching you go
To the route-step, (you know
That command, before, was meant from a halt,)
313. "Route-step—March," is the word,
And as soon as that's heard,
The rear rank will shorten their steps, without fault;

So that one score and eight Inches distance shall make,
'Twixt the front and rear rank; as you did before,
I have no need to tell
That again 'tis "Arms will,"
And in all things conform to what back we went o'er.

314. It perhaps will occur,
When at route-step you are,
That something makes it needful you march by the flank;
Such a case we'll suppose,
Thus, the command then goes—
Next stanza you'll find it, my pupils gallant.

315. "Company, by the right
Flank, file left," I indite,
Adding "March," when rest of command you appear
To most properly know,
When to right face you go,
Then wheel to the left, and keep on that career.
Each file that comes up
Without making a stop,
Will wheel, as the Captain and right guide have done;
All these files in your rear,
When their places appear,
They'll bob into them, in right place every one.

316. All these things you will do
From the route-step, you'll know,
Exactly as though you're marching by a band;
So if not just in place,
Don't get so much space
That at once in true place you can't readily stand.

Should you break in platoon,
It will certainly seem,
That Lieutenants and Captains know what to do;
Take their place on the flank,
While to the rear rank
Of the different platoons, the Sergeants will go.

320. This is the direction,
To break into section,
When you're marching in column, by platoon,
I say
This, "Break into sections,"
You'll see, by reflection,
The movement's the same as for platoons, alway.

These sections, you will see,
Then commanded will be,
By Captain and Ensign, and Lieutenant first;
The case being urgent,
Your Orderly Sergeant,
Command the fourth section, most certainly must.
321. Into sections you'll form,
When you're marching along
At no other time but when column's in route;
In manoeuvres, never
This movement go over,
Since it will not help in what then you're about.

322. When we wish to re-form,
Back to platoon to come,

323. "Form platoons," and "March," is the word will be said;
Now each chief of platoon
To its front quickly 'll come,
And back to platoons their commands they will lead,

This movement corresponds
To the one from platoons,
When company front you're attempting to form;
And it being complete,
Chiefs of left will retreat
To their file-closing place, in the rear, as they can.

To sections we'll not break,
Neither such a move make,
If the front of platoons is less than twelve men;
Nor send files to the rear
So that less will appear
Than six files in platoon, when this thing is done.

325. By the flank you can go
From the sections, also,

You remember, at file right (or left) how to move;
The movement is as plain—
In fact, it is the same—
As at 814, I have shown you above.
326. When to right flank you come,
    And you know it is done
By doubling your files, so that four march abreast,
    Now sometimes it will be,
Most essential, you’ll see,
To march in two files, from the road’s narrowness.
The command, then, for this,
    To be crowned with success,
327. Is, “In two ranks, undouble files,” adding “March;”
The odd numbers march on,
    While the even shorten
Their step, and oblique then, their places to fetch—
    In the rear of the odd;
And as forward they plod,
The rear rank to the left a step strive to gain;
    Touch of elbow retake
With the front rank—they make
This side-step at once—and so there they remain.
328. If you’re marching along
    By left flank, you’ll go wrong
If the odd do not shorten their step, so’s to get
    In the even men’s rear;
It is then very clear
That the even march on, and straight forward keep.
329. When to get back in four
    Ranks, again we desire,
“In four ranks, double files,” and “March,” is command;
This is done just as when
By the flank you first came,
Turn to 136, if you don’t understand.
RHYMED TACTICS.

381. These movements you'll go through
     At the double-quick, too,
     And in time not "Eclipse" nor the "Childers" will vie
     With you in your speed;
     Seven minutes, indeed,
     For eleven hundred yards, is time, if you'll try.

382. When to halt you are told,
     From this route-step, you'll hold
     Your arms at a shoulder, and close up, my man,
     The true distance to get,
     And you will not omit
     To properly form, if you know what I mean.

383. It's a very good plan
     To maintain, if you can,
     The mouth of your piece pointing up in route-
     step,
     Lest the charge might go off,
     And some poor comrade suf-
     Fer death, from the way that your muzzle you keep.

384. Now you're drawn up in line,
     For what we'll do this time,
     Right in front; commands you will hear such as these:
     "Counter-march, Company,"
     And "Right face;" then, 't will be,
     "By file left," and after, to "March," if you please.

385. When, then, at a right face,
     The whole line is in place,
     The two guides coming to a full right about,
     The Captain, from the right
     Of his line, will then break
     Two files to the rear, and show to them their route.
By the side of front man,
Ere the movement's began,
He will take his own place the march to conduct;
The two guides will stand fast
'Till the whole line is past;
In marching, no part of the distance deduct,

But around the right guide,
Every file has to stride,
Then along the front rank their march they'll direct;
When to left guide they've come,
That is, the first two men,
The Captain gives orders to "HALT," I expect;

Adding "FRONT," and "Right, Dress."
Being done, I profess
That the counter-march movement you have got through.

The two guides will then shift
To the right and the left,
Passing front of the ranks as that thing they do.

It is thus, you will see,
You've turned 'round perfectly,
Standing, when you've form'd, just where you stood before;
But your left and your right
Have now changed places quite,
And you face t'other way, of which you'll be sure.

From platoons, this you'll do,
By the same rules; you go

To a counter-march, when your left is in front,
By exact inverse means,
As is readily seen,
If you study the rules, and neglect them you won't.
In column by platoon,
When you 'll come into line,

"On the right into line," and "Guide right." is a command;
When this 's heard, both your guides
Will shift to right side,
Then straight forward march, as you 'll understand.

When you 've just the right space,
'Twixt your right and the place
Where your line 'd best be formed, you 're led to suppose,

"Right line—March," will be said
By your Captain ahead—
This is to first platoon, but no farther goes.

When nearly to the spot
Where on the line you 'll stop,
The Captain will command you thus—"Platoon, Halt;"

The files not yet in line
Will come up in quick time,
Their places find and take in line, without a fault.

The right guide then will throw
Himself the left unto,
Taking place as guide, by facing to the right; The Captain then commands,

"Right, Dress," at which, all hands
Get into places on the line, quickly. Quite

Readily the second,
Marching the first beyond,
Comes to the place in time, itself to get in line;
The First Lieutenant, then,

On the right of his men,
Commands the same as Captain did the other time.
352. The guide of his platoon,
Down to its left will run,
Taking place exact in line with other guide;
Now, after the "Right, Dress,"
First Lieutenant will pass
Round to the place where he belongs, and there abide.

355. Now, "Front" will be the word;
So soon as that is heard,

356. "Guides, Posts," will be command, that you will have to do;
Both guides will then return
To their places in the line,
And forming in column, again we have got through.

When marching left in front,
You make this move, you won't
Be at a loss to know it is done by inverse ways;
The second platoon, then,
Forms first in line, and when
'Tis formed, the first platoon comes into line and stays.

359. Being now formed in line,
We will, for discipline,
Get into one rank, our front to spread out;
The command then will be—(Hum!—ah, ah—let me see—

360. "In one rank form company—March," without doubt.

The right guide, in his place,
Will make a right face,

361. And at March, will step off, the front rank to prolong;

362. Then the files follow on,
By one file at a time,
Front men make right face, while the rear takes a turn
Exactly in place where
His front-rank men turned; then
Directions you have till the last man steps off,
And then "Halt" will be said;
If attention you've paid,
At word "Front" you'll find you've gone just far enough.

363. Rear of line two paces,
File-closers take places,
And you're ready now for what next may turn up;

364. So, to get back again,
May be our wisest plan;
We'll attempt it at once, without making stop.

"In two ranks form company,"
Your precaution will be,
Then, "Company, Right Face," and "March," you must do;

365. To a right face, all come,
Save right guide and one man
Who's next to him. At front they remain till all's through.

366. All your files you will make,
By being careful to take
Your old places in line, in the following way;
Then each alternate scamp*
Will step in the rear rank,
As he reaches his place, without any delay.

367. Now that movement will be Done habitually
By right of companies; but case might arise
That by left we must do 't;
If you did but know it,
Face about—make the rear the front—bless your eyes.

* Parbleu! c'est un tres mauvais nom.
But without it the rhyme wouldn't come.
368. Each man then will perform,
    What else would be wrong,
    Left guide doing what, back was done by the right;
369. When the ranks are in place,
    Right about you will face,
    To a proper front thus; all hands I invite 371. Into four ranks. Now, then,
    From the line we will come:
372, "In four ranks form company." "Company, left Face;" when this you have done,
    And in four ranks have come,
    As in School of Soldier, I'll give you a lift
373. Well over this trouble.
    Your files don't undouble,
    As you face to the front without special command.
    Every four that step off,
    Will leave room enough,
    Say five inches, for files that are on either hand.
374. The file-closers now stand,
    The fourth rank behind;
376. Our four ranks to two again we'll reduce:
    "In two ranks form comp'ny;"
    The same words, you see,
    As back in these rhymes I've had to produce.
    "Company, Right Face," now,
    Our steps to retrace now,
377. Which command hearing, the left guide will stand fast;
    The rest to a right face
    Will then come round space,
378. And at "March," they'll retake the ground just lost.
378. In this way they do it,
    Since now we've come to it,
    Right guide, prolongation of front rank step off,
        And the leading four men,
        Stepping off at same time,
    The others stand fast, until there's room enough
        To form two ranks, in space,
            'Twixt themselves and the place
    That their leaders have reached, while they're standing still;
        When the next four men start
        Thus performing their part,
    Then the next, and the next, and so on until
        Last file has true distance;
    Then, barring a mischance,

379. Company, Halt," with a "Front," you're likely to hear,
    When in two ranks you'll come
    To the front, as you've done
    Say ten thousand times, or that number near.

380. In line, we will suppose,
    We are marching. Here goes,
    To get into four ranks, without halting at all.
        "In four ranks form comp'ny,"
        After which it will be,
        "By the left, double files," and "March," I shall call.

381. The left guide and left file
    Will go forward awhile,
    And the rest to the left will make a half face,
        The odd numbers, behind
        Even numbers, will find
    Their place; even and odd I thus interlace.
RHYMED TACTICS.

Now this thing to achieve,
If I'm right, I believe,
Rear rank, even numbers, their steps will shorten
Odd numbers to permit,
Their right places to get,
And thus the right place you soon will be captured in.

Now in marching oblique,
The right place all must keep,
Abreast of the guide, and your steps so arrange,
(When you've got in ranks four)
That each man may be sure,
When he's faced to the front, that he's in right range.

When each reaches right place,
To make a half right face,
That again to the front their march they'll direct,
Touch of elbows they'll take
To the left—no mistake;
But the movement's complete, I shrewdly suspect.

382. Now to get back again
To the two ranks, the same
As we were before this last move we began,
"In two ranks form comp'ny,
"By the right," it will be,
"Undouble files—March," just as well as you can.

383. The left guide and left file,
Will continue now still,
To march straight to front, as they've done all the time;
While the rest of the men,
To half right face, again
Will come, and obliquing, will approach to line.
So soon as second file,
From left, in this style,
Has gained to the right all the ground that they need
For the left file to form
Into two ranks, they'll come
To front by half face to the left—yes, indeed.

Now left file, with success,
Forms to two ranks—and thus
The movement progresses from the left to the right;
Second four men will form
In two ranks, when there's room,
Then the third, and the fourth—through company quite.

384. I have no need to tell,
Since you all know it well,
That when left is in front, commands are inverse;
Nor will you think it cool,
If the Company School
Being done, for a while, I propose, we disperse.
Instructions for Skirmishers.

To move yourselves rapidly,
In any advance;
Retreat to make steadily,
In all circumstance;
To astonish your foemen,
By scattering fire
In their ranks, when they don't know
Where the deuce you are;
To know each sound of bugle,
(Going to-toot, to-toot,)
Telling you, plainer than words,
What you'll be about;
To keep assailers at bay,
Until in a line,
Your own friends to get formed,
Have plenty of time;
And, in short, to be living
The romance of war,
Be the Nimrods of battle,
Is what Skirmishers are.

1. To such rules as always will give Commander the means of moving
In any direction, so quick
His place he's ever improving,
The Skirmisher's Drill is confined.

2. It never can be expected,
When dodging thro' woods and thro' brakes,
Any way to be protected,
That exact all movements you'll make,
This thing you'll all bear in mind.
3. When thrown out, to clear the way for,
   And protect, the main bodys advance,
Regulate your moves by this corps,
   That by greatest of vigilance,
    They ever well covered will be.

4. All bodies of skirmishers, will
   Have reserve, that keeps in the rear,
That they'll never call on, until
   Too mighty the foe shall appear;
    The strength of reserve will vary.

5. If body thrown out be quite near
   To the whole corps brought in the field,
A small force reserved in the rear,
   Is sufficient their movements to shield.
    The duties of reserve are these:

    To fill vacant places in line,
    Bring powder and shot, and relieve
The wounded or exhausted men,
    And every assistance to give.
    Each chance to assist they will seize.

6. Should corps be such distance away,
   You can't call upon them for help
Without an unusual delay,
   If for succor you have to yelp,
    Another reserve is required.

Whole companies now should be sent,
   And these be employed to sustain,
Where the danger is imminent,
   And skirmishers chance to be slain
    Faster than by you is desired.
7. When only small reserve is used,
   In rear, one hundred and fifty
Paces off, they will be amused,
   By work of front men, so thrifty.
   While, when large reserve's employed,
Four hundred paces they will stand,
   All the men to keep out of sight,
Most strenuously I command,
   Only keeping eye to the fight,
   Till called upon it to enjoy.

8. The movements, you will execute
   At quick or double quick time,
But seldom it is you are put
   To the run, deranging your line,
Confusing yourselves, scattered so.

9. Your pieces you take as you like;
10. To bugle-calls always attend;
11. But don't move too quick; you must wait
    Till bugler, of sound makes an end;—
        Look out now that these things you do.

12. When rapidly you're told to move,
    Take care that you husband your strength,
All chance for protection improve,
    Come coolly where you're sent at length,
Or never you will have success.

Your aim, by your fleeing's deranged,
   If you go too fierce to the fray;
And in fighting it would not be strange,
   If you failed to get back that day;
Or, if back, perhaps weaponless.
DEPLOYMENTS.

15. Forward and by the flank,
    We skirmishers deploy:
16. The first is, when the rank
    We propose to employ

    As skirmishers, are back
    Of line where they must be,
    Before the field they take,
    Where warm work they will see.

    By flank they are thrown out,
    When on that line they stand;
    So you can guess about
    Where you are, by command.

17. Platoon and sections here,
    The same are, as we've seen
    In studies we've been o'er,
    Page first and this between.

    But here, you all must know
    Your exact place in line,
    Must know your comrades, too,
    And you be known by them.

18. On left or centre file,
    Or right, or any one
    That chances to be best,
    Deploying may be done.

    So thus you'll quickly see,
    No kind of ground can bother,
    But forward rapidly,
    You'll go, some way or other.
19. Whenever it may chance,
   Alignments you can keep
In making your advance,
o do so don't forget.

But this thing to attain,
   You'll give up no good place
Where you can best remain
   The enemy to face.

Keep shady all you can,
   Behind some stump or bush,
Then you'll pick off your men,
   And on to glory push.

20. The intervals between
   The different groups of men,
   That you'll have intervene,
Can't well be told, till when

   The ground where you're to fight
   We get near to—you know;
But once we get a sight,
   We'll tell what space you go.

   Though, as a general rule,
   The groups shall be apart
Some two-score paces. Well,
   That's quite enough, at start;

   While comrades will be found
   Some five apart, or so;
This is for open ground;
   From mutual sight don't go!

21. When a battalion's front,
   You're called upon to cover,
To do the thing, you won't
   Just space of ground go over
That their front occupies,
   But half the interval,
On either side that lies;
   You're looked to, to conceal.

This move is to avoid
   A flank attack, you see;
When thus you are deploy'd,
   Their wings must covered be.

TO DEPLOY FORWARD.

22. From halt, or on the move,
    Commands are just the same;
Your valor now we'll prove,
    The Captain will exclaim—

    "First platoon Skirmishers,"
      (The "as" here's understood)
    "On left file intervals"
      ("Take," had I room, I should Write here.) Then he will add,

    "MARCH;" sometimes double quick.
(Ah! won't it now be sad,
    If twice he has to speak!)

23. Now, at the first command,
    Your Lieutenant the First,
Front second platoon stand,
    The Ensigns, with the First;

      Fifth Sergeant then will go
    Front of the first platoon;
He'll place himself there, so
    'Twixt sections he will come.
Soon as the move begins,
Fourth Sergeant takes his place
On left of that platoon,
Soon as he finds right space.

The Captain, to this fourth,
The point will indicate,
When he 'll direct his march.
So far, we've got all straight.

24. The second platoon now,
   Directed by its chief,
Three paces back will go;
   (That back step 's always brief;)

   The Second Sergeant, then,
   On its left flank will stand;
   The Third, to right will come,
   And wait there for command.

Now, when the Captain speaks
   That "March," that's down above,
Left group (Fourth Sergeant's,) starts
   Toward point shown to move.

25. The other groups of fours,
    Left shoulder throwing out
   Obliquely, double quick,
    At once take up their route.

They'll move along so fast,
    That to the right they'll gain
Score of paces, at least—
    (The right distance between

   Each group and that which runs,
    The next on its left hand;)
   Which done, each group will come
    To front, without command;
Conforming to the gait
As well as direction
Of Left group, marching straight,
When movement was begun.

On new line, you will get
One group after another;
And the right guide will come
With right group, I infer.

26. The left guide having reached
The place where line’s left halts,
The men that make the groups
Get ready for assaults.

To do this, they will take
Five paces interval;
(This rule is general.)

28. The sergeants now will go,
Two paces to the rear;
What the Lieutenant ’ll do,
In next verse shall appear:

Seeing his men aligned,
All properly and straight,
He ’ll take his place behind,
Say, paces twenty-eight,

Or any where along,
From thirty to twenty;
A bugler ’ll with him come,
If buglers are plenty;

Four men from the reserve
He takes, as body-guard;
For men that thus shall serve,
The best ones are preferred.
When the advance begins,
First Lieutenant will face
His platoon, to the rear,
And bring them to such place

30. That they shall always be
    One and a half hundred
    Paces in rear of the Platoon that goes ahead;

    And such a distance off
    He’ll keep them all the time.

31. The reserve will conform
    To movements of the line.

32. Your bayonets will be,
    In their scabbard retired;
    A signal you will hear
    When fixing is required.

    Some eighty paces back,
    The Captain takes his stand;
    A bugler he’ll not lack,
    To echo each command;

    He also has four men,
    That from reserve he takes;
    He keeps them near to him
    In all the moves he makes.

Deployment may be made
    On right of the platoon,
And on the centre file,
    It often will be done.

34. Right group of section left,
    When “centre” is the word,
    Under Sergeant the fifth,
    Proceeds to march ahead;

10*
While men, on either hand,
    From that group radiate,
And as in line they stand,
    Their distance regulate.

85. When nothing has been said
    'Bout width of interval,
You'll twenty paces spread;
    This is the principle.

The men that make the groups,
    Just five paces apart
Will always keep themselves,
    Nor from this rule depart;

86. If a whole company,
    To skirmish are deployed,
And that quite near the line,
    Reserves are not employed.

TO DEPLOY BY THE FLANK.

87. From a halt on the line,
    Where you deploy this time,
We'll deploy by the flank.
    The commands, to be frank,
Are like this:

1. "Second platoon," you see,
    "As skirmishers" will be;
2. "By the right flank," you'll "take Intervals." Do not make Any miss;

3. And the "March," I will add,
    Which, now when I have said,
First Lieutenant will take,
    With a step wide awake,
    His station;
That is, place, in the rear
Of the platoon, that here
We deploy. While the V
Sergeant soon, you must see,
    Same platoon,
In the front, just one pace;
He must there find his place.
Third Sergeant, when there's room,
On its right coming soon,
    Will receive
From the Captain, the point
Of direction he'll want.
First platoon will repeat,
What the second did back,
    You perceive.

The Fourth Sergeant will go
To reserve's left flank, so
That the First may remain
On its right, just the same
    As in line.

When you get the command
8. To "March," right face you'll stand,
And start off, every one
But the left group of men,
    (Do you see?)

The left group will stand fast,
Till the rest so far've passed,
That to deploy they've room,
When five paces they roam
    Apart. (Eh?)

Second group, having gone
Twenty pace from left one,
T'ward the enemy'll face,
And deploy their five pace
    Separate.
Then the third, and so on,
As in right place they come,
Turn their fronts to the foe;
Thus, the left group, all through,
Imitate.

First Lieutenant must keep,
By quick step, near the group
'Bout to halt, that he may
See that it does not stray
From right track.

When deployment's complete,
To the rear he will get,
Thirty paces or so.
The Sergeants are but two Paces back.

The first platoon, you know,
Three paces back did go;
It will now about face,
And will march back a space,
Equal to

One hundred and a half
Paces back, is enough.
This distance they'll maintain,
'Till the whole move is done;—
Always so.

By left flank to deploy,
Same commands you employ,
Save that you substitute—
Put "left" where "right" was put,
In command,

"Second platoon" will now
"As skirmishers" please go;
"By the right and left flank;"
(From the centre that,) "take Intervals."
45. You'll see, at 38,
Counsel elaborate,
For the officers' move,
When they hear the above
Orders, all.

47. Command "March," next will come,
When right section, alone,
Comes to a right face,
And left section space,
All but just

Its right group, takes left face,
And stands fast till there's space
For its men to spread out,
Their five paces about.
The rest must,

To the left and the right,
Go ahead, till there's quite Twenty paces between
All the groups—as we've seen
Heretofore.

As each reaches its place,
It will make a right face,
Bringing front to the foe,
And separate men—do
As before.

The Third Sergeant, will be Left of right file, while the Second Sergeant will stand
On the left file's right hand,
In this move.

48. Lieutenant will look out
For the march of each group,
And when all right appear,
Take his place in the rear,
As above.
Deployments may be made
On any group, indeed.
When the Captain names group,
Fifth Sergeant will look out
   For his place,
With the group that is nam'd;
Other moves are the same
As before have been taught.
50. Is whole company brought
   To skirmish,
The directions for you
Are the same you've been through
In the last pages. Now,
To the next thing we go,
   Which is this—

TO EXTEND INTERVALS.

51. This movement, which is employed to extend
   A line of skirmishers, already out,
By principles the same, you'll understand;
   Is done, as are deployments all throughout.

52. The line of skirmishers is at a halt;
   The Captain wishes greater space to take,
Lest the foe, making a sudden assault,
   Should outflank him, and thus should mischief make.
   He will command, "By the left flank"—(put in
The number of paces that he may judge best;
   Then, "extend intervals," and "MARCH!" and then,

53. The group that's on the right, at this stands fast.

   The other groups that help to make the line
Of skirmishers, at once make a left face,
   And march the distance Captain does assign,
   To make between the groups the proper space.
Back at the 40th paragraph, you're told
Exactly how this movement you'll go through,
Turn back there, and instructions you'll behold
To teach you, in extending, what to do.

54. The men that make each group, will still preserve
Five paces space between themselves; not more
Nor less than that space, unless they observe
The ground is such they must keep nearer.

For this rule, in all skirmishing, is right;
In woods, or bush, or hilly ground, or plain,
Your comrades you must ever keep in sight,
Nor from their view a moment you'll remain.

When intervals to change, you may be told,
To intervals of groups it does refer;
With your own group the five paces you hold,
As I have said above, also elsewhere.

55. The line of skirmishers is marching front,
And to extend, essential seems to be,
"On the left group," (so many paces) now,
With "March," Captain's commands are, certainly.

56. Then, the left group, conducted by its guide,
Continues toward the point of direction,
The other groups, turned slightly toward their right,
At double quick, complete this formation.

57. By principles the same, you can extend
Your intervals, from centre of your line;
There's but slight difference in the word command,
And to detail that here, 's not my design.
If, in extending intervals, it be Intended that the space on which you're form'd,
By half as many, occupied shall be,
And that those out, to line should be returned,
The men of company, or of platoon,
Which, as others come up, are to retire,
Fall to the rear successively, as soon
As the new comers take their place to fire.

58. TO CLOSE INTERVALS.

This movement, like the one we've just got through,
Is done by principles of deployment.

If halted, and the thing we wish to do
To bring the line to somewhat less extent,

"By the right flank" (so many paces) "close Intervals—March"—with double quick, perhaps.

The left group will stand fast, every one knows,
Others, toward the left will wend their steps.

As each group reaches its new place in line,
Toward the enemy, at once they'll face,
And blaze away, to make up for lost time,
Nor from their firing, without orders, cease.

If, in advance, the front we would curtail,
"On the left group," (so many paces) "close Intervals—March," command is, in detail,
And thus, of too great front, we will dispose.

The left group, by its guide conducted still,
Keeps straight ahead—no other order knows;
The other groups, turned slightly toward the left,
Obliquely march, the interval to close.
64. Upon the centre, or the right, we may
   Curtail our front, as circumstance demands;
   The principles are just the same, alway,
   As those we’ve seen, to close or to expand.

65. When intervals are closed with the intent
   That twice as many men we’ll have in line,
   The strength of line thus greatly to augment,
   And keep the foe at bay a longer time,

   The reinforcement will such way deploy,
   Its movement to finish, at twenty pace
   Direct in rear of the old company,
   Then move in line as it shall be unmasked.

   Reserves of both, behind the line unite,
   Ready for any work they’ll have to do
   In progress of the skirmish or the fight.
   Now—Closing Interval we have got through.

TO RELIEVE A COMPANY DEPLOYED AS SKIRMISHERS.

66. It now becomes our duty to relieve
   The skirmishers, that so long we’ve had out:
   The new comp’ny will come up and achieve
   Some one deployment that we’ve been about.

67. This, when complete, at twenty paces rear
   Of the line, now so long time in the field,

68. They will advance some paces, to appear
   Front of the company they’re sent to shield.

   The old line, then, has orders to retire,
   Back to reserve, or in some other way,
   But not till they’re beyond the foemen’s fire,
   Will they, in groups of fours, themselves array.

69. If skirmishers are marching in retreat,
   When the relief for them is order’d out,
   They do not halt, but still their marching keep;
   And form upon their own reserve, no doubt.
And the new company that we employ,
To go to help off those now coming back,
By some flank march 'tis best they should deploy,
To cover the retreat from foe's attack.

TO ADVANCE.

70. When a platoon or company, deployed
As skirmishers, is marching by the front,
Habitually in centre is their guide;
But a command for that you do not want.

If, on the contrary, I shall intend
Your guide should stationed be, on left or right,
For such a purpose, a special command,
After the forward, will be requisite.

71. When forward I may wish you to advance,
"Forward," and "MARCH," will echo 'long the lines;

72. The chiefs of sections give it utterance,
And sergeants will repeat the word, sometimes.

73. At first command, up to the line there 'll come
Three sergeants, who will take their stations thus:
First on the right, next on the left, and then,
Third in the centre stands—most valorous.

74. At the word "MARCH," the line moves to the front;
The guide, having received the point to reach,
The skirmishers aligned upon this guide,
Their intervals preserve—I do beseech.
75. The chiefs of sections, will march just behind
   Their sections, thus their movements to direct;

76. The Captain, the whole line, will careful mind,
   And all the movement cautiously inspect.

77. When the advance he thinks is great enough,
   To “Halt,” he cries, which being understood,

78. By chiefs and sergeants, with their voices rough,
   Will be repeated. Then care is bestowed

   To see that the alignment is correct,
   Or as near so as the ground will allow;
   But every man looks out that he’ll protect
   Himself from shots that’re coming from the foe.

This being done, the sergeants will retire
Back to their places, in the rear of line;
The Lieutenants, and the Captain, also,
Go to their stations at just the same time.

79. When to retreat may necessary be,
   This—“In retreat”—will be the first command;

80. The sergeants, what is coming, will foresee,
   And in their place for march will quickly stand.

81. At the command to “March,” the skirmishers
   Directly in their places will turn round,
   March to the rear, if nothing interferes—
   But in their place in line be ever found.

82. The officers and sergeants must maintain
   The best order; (retreat is no dismay,
   Since ’t has been said; that he who’d fight again,
   From present fight had better “run away.”)
124

RHYMED TACTICS.

83. Then, when the Captain word to "Halt" shall give,
84. The skirmishers will halt, and to front face;
85. The chiefs and sergeants, right off, will contrive,
    When men are right, to find their proper place.

TO CHANGE DIRECTION.

86. If the commander of a company
    Desires to change direction to the right,
    "Right wheel," and "March," (perhaps at double quick,
    The movement you proceed to expedite.)

87. At the word March, the right guide will mark time,
    The left guide, move in circle to the right,
    And that he properly may guide the line,
    Toward the right guide he will turn his sight;
    The centre guide, his movements will conform
    To the direction of the wheel he'd make;
    To do so, his steps are but half as long
    As those the left guide is obliged to take.

88. The skirmishers that serve to make the line,
    Their length of step, by their place regulate,
    From the right guide, who only must mark time
    To left, who takes long strides—they graduate.
    They'll often glance their eyes t'ward Marching flank,
    To keep direction and due intervals;
    Since guides and chiefs do anything but thank
    The men found wrong—they'll call them criminals.
89. When the commander of the line shall wish
   The direct march to be resumed, he'll say,
   "Forward," and "March"—there's nothing more than this—
   And centre guide proceeds to show the way.

91. Thus on you keep, directly to the front,
   Your proper intervals with care maintain,
   Until you get commanding word to "Halt,"

92. Then halt, of course—ready to fight again.

93. Change of direction to the left, is made
   By inverse means—the principle's the same
   As that we've just reviewed. There is, indeed,
   No cause that more than this I should explain.

TO MARCH BY THE FLANK.

96. "By the right flank—March," you get command;
97. At first, the sergeants place themselves on line,
98. At march, the men at a right face will stand,
   And move at once, at quick or double time.

   The right guide, placed beside the leading man,
   Conducts him to the point the Captain shows,
   The rest will follow after, as they can,
   Keep in a line and go as leader goes.

99. By the left flank, the skirmishes may go,
   By principles the same, and same command,
   Save that the left, for right, is said, you know,
   The left guide leading—face, to your left hand.

100. At the word "Halt," you'll halt, and then you'll face

101. Toward the enemy you have to fight;
   The officers and sergeants take their place
   In rear of line, and then you are all right.
102. Conforming to the movements of the line, Reserve performs all movements that you make, Maintain their place in rear all the time, Ready at all times your places to take.

103. When chief of the reserve wants to advance, "Platoon forward—guide left," and "March," he'll say; And when to make retreat he would commence, "In retreat—March;"—"guide right," then you'll obey. When he shall give command to platoon, "Halt," At once you'll face toward your enemy. All these commands, when powder once you've smelt, And read this book, you will do perfectly.

104. The bugle signals you will have to learn, And what they mean, and how the moves to make; Thus, at the sound of forward, you will turn Toward your foe, and that way your march take.

105. If skirmishers be marching by the flank, And change of direction must be done, Command will be, by file, the right or left, And to a right or left file you will come.

THE FIRINGS.

106. Skirmishers will fire, either Marching or when at a halt.

107. Firing halting, will be the first, Doing it without a fault; Thus for coolness we'll get credit, And our prowess we'll exalt.
108. "Commence—Firing," are the first words;
    Intimation thus we get,
That our firing may be wanted,
    Since we never've fired yet;
Mind directions now I give you,
    Not one syllable forget.
When command briskly repeated,
    Understood is 'long the line,
The front rank will commence firing,
    Load, and ready get again.
Rear rank coming to a ready,
    Wait to fire until 'tis time.
Soon as the respective leaders
    Of the files that they are in,
Their pieces again have loaded,
    Rear man's fire will then begin;
When their firings done, they reload,
    Front rank then will fire again.
One man of each file must always
    Have his piece already charged,
Thus you keep a constant popping,
    And the foe's dead list enlarge;
Work as rapidly as you can,
    But don't both at once discharge.

109. Always calm, and always steady,
    Take your aim with greatest pains,
Mark the distance between yourselves
    And the foe you entertain.
If each shot don't bring a man down,
    You are very much to blame.

110. In the same place, while reloading,
    It is best you do not stand,
Unless you have some protection,
    Like a tree, or bank of sand,
Lost the foe your spot is marking,
    To send leaden reprimand.
TO FIRE MARCHING.

111. Firing marching, by the same words,
     As from halt, you're told to do:
112. If command comes as advancing,
     Front will halt, and fire low;
     Then, in loading, his march resume,
     Which, when done, rear rank fires too.

     Then rear loads again, and front blazes,
     Then front loads, and rear will fire;
     Thus alternately continue
     To advance, and to acquire
     Speed in loadings and in firings,
     As the foe you're getting nigher.

118. If line in retreat be marching,
     And commence firing, is heard,
     Front rank men t'ward enemy faces,
     Fires his piece, and then, reload;
     Loads, while he's moving to the rear—
     Loading won't his march retard.

     Rear rank man, keeps on retreating,
     Halts, beyond his front ten pace;
     When his front has pass'd and loaded,
     T'ward the enemy he'll face,
     Fire his piece, and then to reload,
     He'll begin at once apace.

     Still retreating, in place keeping,
     Front, ten paces back of rear,
     Turns and fires, and then reloading,
     Never checks his right career.
     Discipline like this, I'm thinking,
     For recruits may be severe.
Thus, alternately, they'll keep up
Firings, by the front and rear,
Neither firing till his comrade
_Loads_, and _ready_ shall appear;
Fire and preserve your alignment—
To that rule you will adhere.

114. If you’re marching by the _right_ flank,
    When word comes to _fire commence_,
_T’ward_ the enemy the front man
    Turns and fires, with confidence;
While the rear rank, marching onward,
_Yields_ to front the preference.

Having fired, the front man, briskly,
    Rear rank man will get behind—
Reload while he’s marching onward;
    Rear rank now his turn will find;
He’ll repeat what front rank’s just done—
Having fired, get front behind.

When command comes to _cease firing_,
Either man that’s out of place
Will, when he completes his loading,
To his station, steps retrace;
See that ‘twixt him and his comrades
There remains the proper space.

115. When you’re marching by the _left_ flank,
    And the firing must _commence_,
_Rear rank_ will _begin_ the firing—
Thus he has the preference;
_Rear_ commencing _first_ in _left_ flank,
Is the only difference.

116. Following rules will be observed,
In cases where they apply:

117. Firing at a halt, or _marching_
By the flank—if so you be—
When you get command to _forward_,
Men who’ve _loaded_, front will fly.
118. Firing at a halt, advancing,
    Or by flank, at the command,
    "In retreat—March," men who've loaded,
    Faced to the enemy will stand,
    Fire, and then retreat while loading;
    To their rank; they won't attend.

119. Firing at a halt, advancing,
    Or retreating, at command,
    By the flank—March, men whose pieces
    Loaded are, outside will stand,
    Fire; then loading while they're marching,
    Soon their place in line they'll find.

120. Skirmishers, to load while marching,
    Must habituated be;
    But they'll halt an instant, priming,
    And for charging cartridge—three;
    Long enough, to be quite certain
    They are ready—do you see?

121. They must practised be in firing,
    Any way they best can fire—
    Kneeling, lying, sitting, standing—
    Any way they can acquire—
    On their backs, or on their bellies,
    On their heads—for all I care.

122. When to fire they are commencing,
    Men of one rank, at one time
    Must not fire; they must take care that
    Fire is scattered 'long the line,
    And until the man in same file's
    Loaded, to fire they'll decline.

123. Officers will take care ever,
    When they're marching in retreat,
    Every advantage to seize on,
    For the enemy's defeat;
    At each place where they'll find cover,
    Fire, the foe t' intimidate.
124. At the signal to cease firing,
    Men who are not loaded, load;
If they're marching, keep on marching,
    But their files form in this mode:
The man of each file happening front,
    Waits till rear, abreast has strode.

125. When you're firing as advancing,
    And to halt you get command,
On the front men line will re-form,
    Fire away, as thus they stand;
When the halt comes, in retreating,
    On the rear you'll form your band.

126. Officers, to battle, never
    Take rifle, nor fowling piece;
But, to watch o'er each manœuvre
    Of their line, they will not cease;
Take advantage of all cover,
    Their men's safety to increase;

See their skirmishers don't wander,
    And their persons thus expose;
Lives of their men they won't squander,
    But will keep at bay their foes;
Do the best of their endeavor,
    With success to skirmish close.

TO FORM COLUMN.

127. A company, as skirmishers deployed,
    Is rallied, better to the foe oppose.
In rallies, bayonets fixed will be employed;
    When rally's ordered, bayonets so dispose.

128. Here, several ways of rallying are shown;
    Which shall be used, depends on circumstance.
129. If scattered horsemen are against you thrown,
    And to the charge should gallantly advance,
The Captain will command, "Rally by four,
The line will halt, if marching, and the men
That make each group, at once their groups restore,
Form for defence as quickly as they can.

The front rank man of even-numbered file,
Guard-against-cavalry position 'll take;
Odd-numbered man, of the rear rank, meanwhile
Takes the same guard, and these stand back to back.

The front rank man, odd file, and rear rank man
Of even-numbered file, will do the same,
Between the men that first the move began—
Facing to right and left they will remain.

The right feet of the four together brought,
Forming a square, a mutual brace complete;
Now you may fire, if you can make a shot
Tell on the foe—but do not move the feet.

130. The Captain's little squad now comes in play;
They'll rally 'round him, making thus a square;
The chiefs of sections will have no delay
Forming their guards the same, for the affair.

131. If, to the Captain, these squares seem too weak,
132. "Rally by sections" is the next endeavor;
The centre group of sections chiefs then seek,
Unless some other group has better cover.

On this group now the skirmishers will run,
The men that make the group will form a square;
Their pieces elevate, as this is done,
That all may see that the Lieutenant's there.
The places 'twixt these four men will be filled
By other skirmishers, as they arrive;
To firmly brace himself, each man is drilled;
To hold his stand, he'll readily contrive.

Movement concluded, the two ranks outside
Fire, as occasion offers for a shot;
And, at charge bayonet they will abide,
Whenever firing will avail them nought.

133. The Captain, with his guard, moves rapidly
Where'er his presence most essential 'll seem;
134. The officers and sergeants steadily
Direct the movement, with sang froid supreme.

Some pieces, in each sub-division, will
At all times loaded be; and never fire
To throw away a shot; don't blaze until
You're certain of your mark as you desire.

135. If the reserve is threatened, it will form
A circle 'round its chief, to charge withstand;
To movements of the line it will conform,
Nor lose its distance, without a command.

136. If the commander of many platoons,
Should judge the section rally is too weak,
That sections can't withstand the charge alone,
And other mode of rally he must seek—

187. "Rally by platoons," he'll command his men;
The principles and means for which, are those
Of section rally, that just now we've seen,
And 'round their chiefs, in circles, platoons close.

138. "Rally on the reserve," perhaps he'll say,
139. The chief of reserve then commences square;
Half sections on the flanks, command obey,
Making right angles with the line to rear.
The Captain, with his guard, to the reserve,
Will move as rapidly as he knows how;
That movement's rightly made, he will observe,
And men to ready, will be ordered now.

140. The skirmishers of each section, will run,
And form in groups upon their inside man,
These groups toward the centre one will turn,
And form the sections, quickly as they can.

Toward reserve, they're moving with all speed,
But proper order all the time maintain,
As toward reserve they steadily proceed,
Unmask it to the right and left again.

As skirmishers arrive, they will complete
The square, that the reserve has but begun,
Close in upon the latter, as they meet,
Without regard to places in the line.

Without command, they'll to a ready come,
And fire upon the enemy commence;
This, by reserve, also, has to be done,
Soon as unmasking gives them a fair chance.

141. If any section is severely pressed
By cavalry, while marching in retreat,
In circle 'round their chief, they'll be amassed,
And, thus prepared, the enemy they'll meet.

Soon as the danger's passed—if it should be
Again in section—they'll at once re-form,
Resume the march t'ward reserve rapidly,
And to the square, in time, I trust they'll come.

142. To form a square when closely pressed by horse,
Requires both coolness and activity;
A flurry only brings from bad to worse,
And "cutting up" ensues, most certainly.
RHYMED TACTICS.

143. Each instant of respite the Captain ’ll get,
   By him must be most profitably used,
To form his square—or, what is better yet—
   (Well, to learn that, the next verse you’ll peruse.)

When his assailants look to him too strong,
   To combat with the force he’s on the ground,
And he feels certain it won’t take too long
   For him to reach his regiment, beyond,

He’ll break his square to column by platoon,

144. At half distance; “Form column—March,” command,
   To centre dress, each platoon then will come,
Those facing rearward, right about will stand.

Upon the right and left of their platoons,
   The guides at once will their own stations take;
Those of the second platoon, will alone
   The proper semi-distance regulate.

145. Now, everything prepared, if in retreat
   He deems it wise his column to command,
“In retreat—March,” the order is, complete,
   And to the rear they’ll face, you may depend.

Soon as the column’s started, he will state,
   “Guide right,” (or “left,”) just as the case may be;
Direction of the march he’ll indicate
   To leading guide—then all’s done properly.

148. But—hi! Look out!—an error he has made—
   Again he’s threatened by the cavalry—
“Form square,” and “March,” most likely will be said,
   And well ’t will be to do it rapidly.
RHYMED TACTICS.

149. The column halts—the first platoon will face
   Briskly about, the enemy to dare,
   Outer half sections of each platoon place
   Themselves to rear—and thus they form the square.

150. If now he wants the column to advance,
   And go to work as skirmishers once more,
151. Or, for aught else, "Form column—March," at once
   Will be command—you'll see, 144.

152. The column being formed, the Captain gives Command to "Forward—March"—guide left or right—
   At which (of course) the column forward moves,
   T'ward side of guide their elbows they unite.

154. If wishing to gain ground, to left or right,
   By rapid wheels 't is done, upon the side
   The guide's not on; to do which thing aright,
   If necessary, he can change the guide.

155. If in column, by platoon, company
   Half distance—right in front—we will suppose,
   As skirmishers, first platoon we'd deploy,
   The way 't is done, we some ways back disclose.

   But if the second platoon is the one,
   That on the centre file we would deploy,
   Soon as 't is time the movement was begun,
   Here are the terms of command we employ:

156. "Second platoon as skirmishers," and then,
   "On centre file, take intervals," and "March."
   At first command, the chief of first platoon
   Tells them that, this time, they're left in the lurch.
The second platoon chiefs, will place themselves
Before the centre of their sections, then
Fifth Sergeant, as the centre guide excels,
And takes his place one pace in front of line.

157. Chief of right section says, "Section, right face,"
To a left face the left section will come;
158. At march, both sections rapidly will trace
Their steps briskly, right and left direction.

158. The first platoon, by this march, is unmasked;
Which done, by left and right flank readily,
With first platoon, sections come up abreast,
And then deploy, to skirmish, principally.

159. If, by flank, deployment's to be made,
Second platoon gets front in the same way;
Some steps beyond alignment of the first
It halts, command to deploy to obey.

160. When one or more platoons may be thrown out
As skirmishers, to keep the foe at bay,
And Captain wishes them to turn about,
For safety on battalion to rally,

161. "Rally on the battalion," he will ask;
At which the skirmishers, and their reserve,
Battalion's front will rapidly unmask,
And t'ward its nearest flank their way will carve.

162. Soon as they've passed beyond file-closer's line,
The men will take the quick step, and the chiefs
Their sub-divisions will at once re-form
Behind the wing, where rally 'd get relief.

There they'll remain, until they get command
From the battalion's Colonel to move on;
On either flank, perhaps, he'll bid them stand;
Perhaps, in other places, have them form.
163. If many platoons should united be,
   Behind some shelter, or battalion's wing,
In column close, they'll always form array,
   Or column at half distance do the thing.

164. When a battalion that is cover-ed
   By company of skirmishers, form square,
The covering company to its rear is led.
   The chiefs of sections will direct it there.

The angles of the square, to take them in,
   Will kindly open—like gigantic jaws;
The skirmishers, when swallow-ed, will form
   In column, rear first front, without a pause.

165. If circumstance the angles should prevent
   From opening, the wanderers to take in,
Upon the ground, at feet of the front rank,
   They'll kneel, arranging bayonets threat'ning.

About the angles crevices they'll find,
   Where they may do good service in defence;
In short, the man will have to be stone blind,
   Who fails to make himself of consequence.

166. If the battalion in column is formed,
   And ready at once to form in a square,
In rear of centre of division third,
   The skirmishers will form in platoon, there.

When "Form square—March," is heard, they forward move,
   And to perform their part at once prepare;
Thus, shortly, their position they will have—
   Since they'll close up to where the buglers are.

167. When skirmishers are rallied by platoon
   Or section, back of wings of the main line,
In order that again to front they'll come,
   They'll march t'ward interval by flank—quick time.
168. When platoons, or their parts, within a square,
    Are to be sent out, skirmishers to act,
    'T is by the flank that they'll get out—from there,
    Thrown forward (see 157, back).

    The square unmasked, at once they'll be deployed;
    Part on the right and part on the left file;
    Foe driven off—quiet at length enjoyed—
    To

    THE ASSEMBLY,

    we will go awhile.

169. A company will be assembled, when
    No danger of disturbance there exists;
    This, generally, will be done in quick time,

170. And, in the following words, command consists:

171. "Assemble on the reserve." When 't is said,
    In groups of fours the skirmishers will come;
    The front follow, the rear men go ahead,
    And all t'ward the reserve, in quick time, come.

    Each man, in ranks, will take his proper place;
    The whole being formed, they will at once rejoice
    Battalion—marching toward it space,
    Their proper place in line to now regain.

172. On centre, on the right, or on the left,
    Marching or halt, assembly may be done.

173. If 't is the first that 's wished, with this command—
    "Assemble on the centre"—'t is begun.
174. At which command, the centre guide will start
   Directly for the point the Captain’s shown;
The front rank man, of the directing file,
   Follows the guide, while the rear rank will come—

   Cover his men; the other comrades, two,
   That make group—those on their left likewise,
   Diagonally march, the thing to do,
   Accelerating gait with enterprise,

   Reform their group, as drawing near and near,
   To the directing file they’re marching on;
   The right section, in manner similar,
   Unite in groups, then to the guides will come.

175. Assemblies, on the left or the right file,
   By principles the same, they’ll execute;
176. And principles the same will make the rule
   When they’d assemble marching in retreat.

177. When at a halt assembly’s to be made,
   The orders for the move are just the same.
   By marching by the flank, command’s obey’d,
   And while they’re marching, group they will reform.

   As they to proper place in line arrive,
   Their arms they’ll bring, left shoulder, to support;
   Throughout the skirmish, all will constant strive,
   To be complete in every move here taught.
TO DEPLOY A BATTALION AS SKIRMISHERS, AND TO RALLY THIS BATTALION.

178. Battalion in line,
   Is standing this time,
And commander, on sixth company,
   May wish to deploy;
   He will signify
His intentions to officers three.
   Lieutenant Colonel,
   At first he will tell
The direction that he'd give the line,
   Where he thinks it best
   Right of sixth to rest,
With other things that he may design.
   The reserve will be,
   Of companies three,
To commander of which he will tell,
   Where he'll have it placed,
   Which way it shall face,
And with what line be parallel.

179. Lieutenant Colonel,
   Thus knowing full well,
Exactly what is now to be done,
   In front of the right
   Sixth company gets,
To its left the Adjutant will come.

180. The Colonel commands,
   As there each one stands,
"First platoon, as skirmishers," and then,
"On right of the sixth Company," and next,
"Take intervals—March," he'll be adding.
181. At second command,
The captains who stand
In command of the sixth and the fifth,
To deploy will prepare,
Their first platoons, where
Lieutenant Colonel sends them adrift.

182. Fourth comp'ny will face
To right, in its place.
While comp'nis the seventh and eighth,
A left face will make,
Their positions to take,
Thus to skirmishing go about straight.

183. When last word is said,
The movement is made;
Platoons, of 5th and 6th will begin,
Forward; the right guide
Of 6th will decide
Direction—L. C. having told him.

184. The company faced
To the right, will pace
Straight forward, to an interval make (Counting from the left
Of company fifth)
Of one hundred paces—no mistake.
As skirmishers, now,
At once, fourth will go—
Its first platoon, I meant then to state—
Deploy on left file;
And, in the meanwhile,
The companies the seventh and the eighth,
By left flank will do
What fourth's going through,
The intervals taken they will count
From the right file, quite,
Of Comp'ny on their right
In the line—steps one hundred 'n amount.
RHYMED TACTICS.

First platoons deploy
On the right file. Apply
The rules that back we have been over;
To complete design,
Each company align
With those that deployed they discover.

Now, to follow the deployment,
Adjutant and L. C. come;
This they do, to make it certain
That the movement's rightly done.
Then they back to Colonel come.

The reserves of comp'ny will then,
Form-ed be in echelon;
Major in command, he'll march them
Where he's told to, every one;
He'll know how the thing is done.

Colonel, with a keen observance
The while, movement will inspect;
When it's finished, take his station
Where best he'll his men direct,
Every error to detect.

If it is a flank deployment,
That the Colonel would have done,
Fifth and sixth comp'nies in moving,
To the front ten paces come;
That's the way the move's begun.

Other comp'nies march'd by the flank,
Look to fifth and sixth, for guide,
When the interval's established,
To the line they've made, will strike;
There they'll be at once deployed.

*Multum in parvo.
191. If battalion is in column,
    And deployment is th' intent,
Principles, and commands, will then
    Be the same, in that event,
As the last I did present.

197. When battalion's to be rallied,
    Bugle-sound will indicate
That such movement is suggested;
    Reserves, then, such places take,
As the movement will protect.

Into details of this movement,
    I have not the space to go,
All I'll write, is done this moment,
    Since the book I've gone quite through.
Now and then, I have omitted
    Parts that every soldier 'll know,
But, until 187,
Naught essential I forego.
Here I beg to make my bow.

THE END.
